FIVE ROYAL WOMEN DEFY A DICTATOR

Queen Marie, Her Daughters and Her Daughter-in-Law Bury Their Own Differences to Break The Hold of Ion Bratiano on the Throne of Rumania—A Tense Drama of Balkan Politics

By EMIL LENGYEL.

In a Balkan country, where truth is still far stranger than fiction, an amazing drama is unfolding itself. Five royal women—three of them Queens and two Princesses—are ranged against a dictator who has long held sway over the land. The object is the crown itself and the conflict has gone on while the King lies ailing. But the drama is even deeper than that. There are international issues that might involve more than one Balkan country, and when the Balkans blow up all Europe has come to regard it as a danger to the peace of the world.

The five royal women, united in their enmity against the dictator, are aligned in two camps among themselves, and here, too, the question as to which camp shall gain the crown. In Paris there lives, listening intently, a pretty Prince, whose stirring representation of his right to the throne was the genesis of the whole strange affair. And in the background are the supernumeraries—courtiers and intriguers, a semi-Oriental gathering, who intrigue for the sake of intrigue and occasionally for financial gain.

The country is Rumania and the principal personage in the drama is Queen Marie, just returned from her trip to the United States. The four other royal women are the three daughters and the daughter-in-law of Queen Marie—Queen Elizabeth, wife of the dethroned King of Greece; Queen Marie, the younger, wife of the King of Yugoslavia; Princess Ileana, youngest daughter of the Queen, and Princess Helena, wife of the former Crown Prince and mother of the present Crown Prince. The dictator is Ion Bratiano, the most powerful man in the kingdom.

Prince Carol Began It.

The Prince whose abolication and exile is at the bottom of all these complications is Carol. When he left his father's court and his wife to elope with Mme. Lupescu, he was obliged to renounce his claim to the throne and to accept exile for ten years. The possibility of his recall hangs over all the happenings at the capital.

In the triangular struggle among the royal women over the future of the crown the deserted Crown Princess and mother of the present Heir Apparent seeks for herself a leading influence in the regency that would follow the death of the King. Here she opposes her mother-in-law, Queen Marie. Elizabeth, erstwhile Queen of Greece, takes the side of her sister-in-law against Queen Marie, but she strives to avert the regency by the intervention of the former Crown Prince. The Queen of Yugoslavia also is a partisan of Carol and opposes the regency. She has used all her influence to have the dying King recall his son.

womanhood in the atmosphere of a Balkan court where the divine nature of hereditary kingship is a theory still seriously advanced. She is not one to admit that the days of royalties are of the past and she believes in the old-fashioned idea of sticking to one's guns as long as one's ammunition lasts.

Queen Marie has revealed herself as an adept in Balkan politics. Hitherto the world has known her mostly as the "mother-in-law of the Balkans" who had successfully married her daughters to the kings of neighboring countries, as a writer and painter and an excellent advertising agent. The dramatic moment in her character has been revealed only in the course of this battle. The Queen is a dangerous enemy for Bratiano, since she knows the political game almost as well as he does.

Queen Marie's daughters are less remarkable women than their mother, but their participation in the royal drama of the Cotrocani palace gives it an international aspect. The eldest daughter, Queen Elizabeth, is her mother's side-de-camp. There is an atmosphere of tragedy around this Queen. When she was married to George, the Crown Prince of Greece, about six years ago, her mother was hailed as one of the greatest diplomats of the Balkans. Sixteen months after the young couple had ascended the throne Greece was proclaimed a republic and they had to leave the country post haste.

Queen Elizabeth has been in exile for two years. Should the dynasty of her parents be dethroned she would be exiled both from the country of her birth and of her selection.

Her younger sister, Queen Marie of Yugoslavia, has been more fortunate than Elizabeth. When she identified herself with the anti-Bratiano faction her position as Queen of one of Rumania's allies made her participation in a domestic conflict a matter of concern at Belgrade. As a result, the thing was quiet, but the underground work of destruction had begun in deadly earnestness.

The King was subjected to another humiliation when he was forced to sign the so-called mining laws, which provide for the nationalization of the subsoil and threatened the expropriation of a large part of the foreign capital invested in Rumania. This measure caused a storm of protest, in which the American Government joined. The effect of these laws, if carried out, would be to concentrate that part of the natural wealth of that the peasants and the Transylvanians disliked Bratiano, he endeavored to align himself with them.

When Prince Carol had become too troublesome for the leading political group he was sent to England to attend the funeral of Queen Alexandra as the representative of the Rumanian royal family. A few hours after he had left a young woman, a friend of his, crossed the frontier, possessed of a passport issued by the Rumanian Government. At the same time Bratiano's secret agents at Paris were instructed to keep an eye on the doings of the Crown Prince on his way back.

When Carol met the young woman in Paris, the secret agents reported that fact to their superiors in Bucharest. Immediately the King wired his son to return to the court. The Prince refused and submitted his resignation, which was instantly accepted. In addition, he was forbidden to enter Rumania for ten years. His rights as the heir apparent now devolved upon his 5-year-old son, Michael. A council of regents was created consisting of the President of the Supreme Court and the Patriach of the Orthodox Church, both friends and political henchmen of Bratiano, and of Prince Nicholas. By signing this law last Winter the King, it was then said, signed the death warrant of his dynasty.

The court was now entirely at the mercy of the Bratianos. If the King died, and he was then past 60 and a sick man, the regal power would go into the hands of the ruling political group which could easily dethrone young Michael and have Ion Bratiano elevated to the throne.

The Queen again resorted to heroic means when she decided to undertake her long-postponed American trip. She came to America to advertise her dynasty, and by creating ties of sympathy between the American people and herself to strengthen herself against a possible coup d'état. American public opinion counts for much in Rumania, and if, besides gaining the sympathy of the nation she could obtain a loan for Rumania as well, it would have been all the better for the royal family. Then the Queen was suddenly called back by the critical illness of the King.

The Queen Declares War.

It was in Paris that she declared war on the Bratianos. Although she was forbidden to see her son, Carol, she met him at the house of a friend. By doing so she announced that she meant to fight this battle to the finish. She realized that things had come to a pass where drastic measures had to be taken. The King was seriously ill and might die at any moment. In case of his death, Bratiano would take control of the court through his regents.

Queen Marie evidently hopes that public opinion in America will be with her in the struggle. Ion Bratiano appears not to care about public opinion as long as its adverse nature is not expressed in an armed rebellion at home. Should things go that far he could, no doubt, repeat his feat of 1911, when an armed revolt against his so-called "liberal" rule resulted in the death of nearly 11,000 peasants.

The situation is further complicated by secondary incidents. Prince Carol's sisters, except Ileana, want him back on the throne in case his father dies. This, however, cannot be done until Prince Michael reaches his majority, which is thirteen years off. A constitutional amendment could help, perhaps, but its passage is extremely difficult, and, besides, would require too much time.

On the other hand, Queen Marie, who, in opposition to her other daughters, except Ileana, was reported to be a candidate for the regency, has succeeded, so it seems, in obtaining the cooperation of General Averescu, the Prime Minister of Rumania, who previously was devoted to the Bratianos. This may be, of course, a camouflage to mislead the royal belligerents into a false position. Such "tricks" are not uncommon in Rumanian political life.

Finally, there is the possibility of Carol's staging a coup d'état through gaining the army and the peasants to his side and marching through Transylvania, which is said to be in favor of his restoration. It is this possibility which Bratiano seems most to fear.

CHRISTMAS EVERGREEN CROP RUNS INTO THE MILLIONS

New York City Alone Receives 500 Carloads of Trees, Holly and Mistletoe Each Year

NEW YORKERS still want a dash of color at Yuletide which no factory or workshop can provide. The Christmas tree, the holly and the mistletoe—all products of the trackless forests—are losing none of their popularity in spite of countless artificial substitutes that beckon from shop windows.

Supplying the Christmas greens for the metropolis is no one-man job. New York uses 400 carloads of Christmas trees annually and the equivalent of 50 to 100 carloads of holly and mistletoe. A carload of trees contains 600 bundles, or an average of 1,800 trees, which would indicate that some 720,000 metropolitan homes have a Christmas tree each year. Since the entire country is estimated to use only 3,000,000 trees annually, Manhattan and its environs get their proportionate share.

Harvesting of the Christmas trees begins long before the most ambitious shopper begins her rounds. The kinds of evergreens favored by New Yorkers are found mostly at a considerable distance from the railroads and cutting begins in October, so that they may be hauled out before heavy snows impede travel in the forest depths.

Where Trees Come From.

The finest trees, according to a prominent dealer, come from Nova Scotia and have to be hauled forty or fifty miles to the nearest railroad. New Brunswick and Maine also supply some fine trees and amp considerable quantities here each year.

Formerly, all trees were shipped in flat cars, but in recent years dealers have insisted on delivery in box cars whenever possible. Trees loaded on flat cars are exposed to the elements and often arrive with a heavy crust of snow and ice.

Dealing in Christmas trees is very much of a gamble for the dealer. The business is practically limited to the period between Dec. 10 to 24. Every family wants one tree, but none want a second tree even at bargain rates, so if there is an oversupply the bottom drops out of the market just before Christmas. Conversely, if there is a shortage the lucky dealer who has plenty of trees is bound to reap a handsome reward.

Some of the leading receivers of Christmas trees handle the trees on consignment and thereby let the shippers do their own gambling. The majority of Christmas trees, though, are bought outright by wholesale produce dealers who take chances on a few carloads.

Holly and Mistletoe.

Weather is seldom a factor in demand unless there are deep snows or heavy rains just before Christmas which prevent people from shopping.

Holly and mistletoe come from the States along the coast south of New York—New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia and the Carolinas. Much of the supply comes from points close enough to New York to be trucked in. On account of the large quantities brought by truck, it is impossible to ascertain the exact amount, but it is estimated as equivalent to 50 to 100 carloads, the bulk of which is holly.

Every year holly is becoming scarcer and the wild supply is so depleted that cultivation of the holly tree has been started in northwest Washington on a small scale. Although the native supply is waning the demand shows no signs of diminishing. Nevertheless, prices vary greatly with the supply on hand, and the dealers who distribute this essential of Yuletide festivities often find themselves in the same sort of a poker game that the Christmas tree dealers are in.

Our mistletoe with its wax-white berries is a parasite which grows on forest trees and comes largely from North Carolina. The supply is none too abundant and good quality is becoming scarcer every year.

REIGIOUS BELIEF SURVEYED IN TWO EUROPEAN CAPITALS

Leading Parisians Discuss Immortality and Two London Papers Poll Their Readers

PARIS.

THREE European publications, two in London and one in Paris, have undertaken recently more or less extensive surveys of public opinion on the fundamentals of religion. The English editors resorted in each case to a referendum of their readers, bringing in thousands of replies. The French newspaper, Comoedia, chose instead to interrogate certain noted people. It also simplified the issue, omitting the many theological points upon which the English questions were based, and asking simply, "Do you believe in a future life?"

Mme. Alphonse Daudet is a believer in a continued existence, not only by religious conviction, but because of "personal impressions, indefinable presentments which prove to me that the dead manifest an interest in the living, aiding and watching over them." M. Henri-Robert believes in the future life "as promised by the Catholic religion." "If," he adds, "death ended all, that would be too sad and too unjust." Mme. Cécile Sored (the Comtesse de Ségur), is convinced that life is a continuing and developing process.

This Life Not Enough.

Henry Bordeaux, the novelist, says that, "My thirst for life is such that I am not content with this life alone," and Dr. Charcot, similarly, expresses his belief in a future life "because it would be very disagreeable to think otherwise." Francis Jammes believes in survival "because I believe firmly all that the Catholic Church believes and teaches."

Charles Richet, the famous scientist, is not quite so definite about it. "Sometimes I believe," he says, "and sometimes—more often perhaps—I don't believe. How can a physiologist suppose that there is survival of mind without brain? On the other hand, how can one deny the so-called spiritistic facts which involve by hypothesis the simplest of explanations? This is not very satisfactory, but in regarding the two opinions as possible I am at least sure of committing no half-errors."

Blasco Ibáñez does not believe in future life, giving, like Dr. Charcot, reasons based upon his emotional preferences in the matter. "To live always with the people who have bored us on earth? What a misfortune! I prefer the sleep without dreams, the annihilation of death. Besides, I don't think about a future life. If it exists, we shall see; but death is something certain, in any case more certain than survival."

For Henry Barbusse, who wrote so vividly of death in his war stories, "unfortunately some proof is necessary, if only a very little proof. I have in vain looked about me and questioned people who believe, and I find only the desire that they have for a future life, the clear advantages that they find in living with such a belief—but all that does not constitute the least proof.

"I understand that those who believe hold reason in contempt and possess means of investigating the unknown and the hereafter that are superior to reason. Let them prove to me reasonably the absurdity of reason."

Equally interesting results came from the two polls in England, one taken by The Nation, one by The London Daily News. Of The Nation's readers 537 said they believed in a personal God, 736 said they did not; while the Daily News readers showed a large majority—9,991 against 3,687—in favor of a personal deity. Sixty-five of the former group were doubtful and 306 of the second group evidently were doubtful also.

As to immortality The Nation's poll recorded 578 believers against 646 unbelievers and 114 doubtful; while The Daily News results showed 10,161 convinced of a future life, 3,178 not inclined to believe in it, and 704 in doubt.

OUR TOWN AND ITS FOLK

Santa in Chinatown

By BERTRAM REINITZ.

CHINATOWN has finally capitulated to Santa Claus's jovial propaganda. Christmas, with trees, wreaths, gifts and possibly a few carols, is coming to Mott, Doyer and Pell Streets, the slender thoroughfares that comprise the Manhattan branch of the Celestial Republic.

The Yuletide has long meant much to the bit of the Bowery around the corner from Chinatown, where three missions have for some forty years staged an annual stuffing session for the lean and hungry habitués of the lodging houses and for those, even more lean and more ardently hungry, who have no address at all. There can be no questioning the fact that the Bowery believes in Santa Claus. But this faith long failed to communicate itself to the taciturn, slant-eyed denizens of the late Chuck Connors's domain. Ignoring the holiday season was the one thing in which rival tongs—the On Leongs and the Hip Sings—quietly concurred. The community houses of the four major family groups—Toms, Leas, Ings and Kwongs—were devoid of the slightest touch of tinsel.

Yet even the high priest at the joss house admits that it was an uphill struggle to keep Christmas out of Chinatown. It was extremely difficult, he confides, to give a thoroughly satisfactory explanation to the children as to why Santa Claus visited their Caucasian companions over on Bayard and Mulberry Streets but completely passed them up. The women, too, he says, have acquired considerable of the old assurance employed by Occidental wives toward their spouses and, are all but demanding that they be remembered in a material way on Christmas.

The high priest says that it will not surprise him at all if he does a little Christmas shopping himself. Several of the shopkeepers among his parishioners are offering bright and beautiful ties, just the kind that he knows will delight his two young nephews, who conduct the largest laundry on Knickerbocker Avenue, over in Ridgewood, Brooklyn. He rather likes the displays of gleaming gewgaws in some of the Mott Street establishment that have never, before this year, carried such merry merchandise. He does believe, however, that the merchant on Pell Street at Doyers who is exhibiting a small Christmas tree in his window is going a bit too far.

Our Own Near East

TWO blocks west of Wall Street lies New York's Near East, a transplanted sector of the Hither Orient and the only district in the metropolis devoted to the preparation and distribution of sheesh, katab, keniffa and Turkish fruit paste. It also happens to be one of the scant few sections of the city where spiced meat balls mugly wrapped in grape leaves are a mainstay of the local menu.

The row of modest restaurants on Washington Street from Rector to Morris is the rendezvous for most of the 9,000 Armenians and Syrians who inhabit these five boroughs. This swarthy citizenry is augmented by a legion of other New Yorkers possessed of adventurous appetites.

The two and three story buildings of this curious community are feeble when brought to comparison with Wall Street's resplendent structures, a few hundred feet away. The tenants of these houses, whose hallways are kept pungent by the culinary concoctions of many eating places, are almost exclusively of Near Eastern origin. Many are employed in the twenty-one lace, linen and silk shops huddled on Rector Street, between Washington and Greenwich. Some dwellers are itinerant venders of shawls, tablecloths and colorful lingerie—small dark men with luxuriant mustaches and huge black satchels.

It is a highly sociable section. Each evening congenial neighbors foregather in the several restaurants, munch the sticky, exotic confections, sip the syrup-like coffee and talk Turkey. There are elders who discourse fluently and habitually on Ottoman depredations. There are others who, listen to the wintry winds whistling up from the bay and speak wistfully of a distant land of ever-smiling skies. Still others argue for hours as to just what proportions of nuts, raisins, flour, oil and honey are required for the perfect katab.

Strength Machines

THE eighteen strength-recording machines in the penny arcade on Sixth Avenue between West Twenty-third and West Twenty-fourth Streets are easily the most popular devices in the establishment, according to an elderly attendant who changes silver to cents for patrons. He vouchsafes the information that the big boxes devoted to the exhibition of largely unadorned and somewhat doubtful pulchritude receive consideration secondary to that enjoyed by the ingenious contraptions that register lifting and lung power, the grip and the ability to absorb electric current. Appliances that forecast the future or make music or precipitate perfume are given tertiary attention or less.

Preference for muscle machines is shown not only by the patrons with ample necks, expansive shoulders and truck-driving gauntlets but also by the more meagre men who cut, sew and press in the coat and dress contractors' plants between Fifth and Seventh Avenues in the middle West Twenties.

"There are fellows, not young either, who weigh about 110 pounds in their Winter overcoats with a sweater underneath, who stop off on their way home almost every evening and try out their strength," the attendant confides. "One tiny guy comes in here regularly and tugs at the toughest machine in the place. He marks down, in a little notebook, the number of points registered on the dial. He told me that he decided he needed strength because it was only a matter of time before he was going to take a healthy sock at his foreman."

Harbor Fog

THESE are the days when a thick, creamy fog will swiftly embrace the Upper and Lower Bays and cause the harbor craft to scream their location or progress. A few blinking blocks of light above denote New York's impressive skyline and sometimes even these are obscured. Tugs lose most of their pert assurance and grope nervously through the mist. Tramp steamers anchored in the harbor sound their bells constantly but are unseen. Deckhands on the squat Staten Island ferryboats become grim men of the sea. They press to the railing of the upper deck, supplementing the tense vigil being maintained by skipper and mates in the pilot house.

The journey from the Battery to St. George, ordinarily consuming twenty-five minutes, may take thirty-five or forty. There is an almost continuous chorus of "straight ahead" and warnings of craft that suddenly take shape at starboard or port. Passengers occasionally participate in sentinel service, but this is not encouraged because of a common tendency to give shouting publicity to maritime mirages.

To some of the deckhands the ordeal of watching is nerve-wracking; to others it is merely irksome. To at least one, however, it is keen delight. He is a grizzled sailor who long ago used to peer into the dense fogbanks off Newfoundland.

"Most of the time, cruising this harbor makes me feel as if I was sort of sliding on a dance floor," he observes. "These ferryboats roll less than a subway train. Working on one of these passenger scows is what a seafaring man might refer to as being in retirement.

"I get a real tang of the sea, though, when we have to poke our way through one of these fogs. The old zest comes back again. I keep my mind on my work, but I do manage to do a little imagining, like playing that this is thirty years ago and I am up in the crow's nest of the trim little ship that went just about anywhere that anybody wanted a cargo taken to."

STRANGER THAN FICTION

Judgment of an Egg

By S. T. WILLIAMSON.

PERHAPS one impelling reason for attempts at communicating with the dead is curiosity or the hope of learning a cause for strange actions and statements of the deceased while alive. Sometimes the motive borders on the spiteful; the incoherence of the dead gives to a few of the living the first opportunity for the last word.

Efforts to talk with those beyond the grave thus far have produced only Delphic replies. Twitching mediums and scrawly ouija boards report statements strangely out of keeping with the earthly characters of the dear departed. The greatest of rounders while alive may be enjoying the company of the saints. The most illiterate tell of highly intellectual goings on with Shakespeare, Milton and Louisa May Alcott. And when business matters are brought up the medium passes along some of the crookedest stock tips.

Out of such essays at communication nothing of homely interest ever comes from the dead. The living are not told where to find the key to the attic closet. Ether, ectoplasm and tipping tables are mysteriously reticent about intimate family matters.

Few people could be more anxious to penetrate the silence of the grave than Mrs. Margaret Barnes of Manchester, England. More than anything else she would like to know whether her late husband meant it, or was he fooling—and if the latter, why.

JAMES BARNES, her husband, was a pilot on the Manchester Ship Canal, which was a somewhat prominent profession. His countrymen have the reputation of dressing for their parts, and this characteristic extends to the sea and ships. One sure sign of an English port is the appearance of tugs and tenders that meet a liner. Across each diminutive vessel is a navigator's bridge, seemingly almost as large as that of the transatlantic ship, and which gives to the individual pacing it the dignity of a liner's captain.

And to be a pilot on the stretch of canal between the Liverpool docks and Manchester's clattering mills sometimes involves as much responsibility as comes to those who toss in tiny pilot boats off great ocean ports. A ship with her stem poked into the bank of the raging canal can be just as stranded as when caught on a reef. And whether the scene is canal, river, harbor or high seas—a collision is a collision.

From rewards from such possibilities Pilot Barnes had saved he died between £5,000 and £6,000. Five years before he signed a will dividing this amount between Maggie, his wife, two sons by a former marriage, and two children of a dead son now dead. But after his death in 1925 Maggie Barnes found in the bottom of a wardrobe an empty envelope on which was written with an indelible pencil in her husband's hand: "Dec. 1925. Mag. Everything to you. J. B."

INTO the solemn atmosphere of the English court of probate Lord President on the bench appearing like the King of Clubs in his robes and cascading white wig, with barristers bobbing about in their gowns and white pigtails, a strange subject was formally introduced. The "document" and as the last will and testament of James Barnes, pilot, of Manchester. An empty envelope was passed from hand to hand while lawyers contended and the Lord President gravely pronounced.

In behalf of Widow Barnes it was proclaimed that the writing on the envelope showed Barnes's wish for his wife to receive his entire estate, and that was as much as the deceased was required to do. The unwitnessed "document" could be ignored in the classification of a will. Counsel for other relatives held that whether sailing the Manchester Ship Canal could be construed as a "voyage."

The deceased, pronounced the President, was familiar with the method of making a landmark, for he had made one. In order to write a disposal of one's estate on an eggshell struck the court as one of the most grotesque possibilities which could be conceived as the act of a man engaged in one of the most serious undertakings of life.

Nor did the Court concede that the communication on the eggshell was a "testamentary disposition made by a mariner or seaman at sea." It was not established that the "document" was anything more than the complained freak, declared the President, and "the suggestion that a pilot on board ship should be unable to find a blown egg and put the date on it was a tax upon one's credulity."

In the Manchester (England) Assize Court last month Lord [illegible] pronounced against the validity of a "document" and for [illegible] will of 1920.

Judgment of an Egg

By S. T. WILLIAMSON.

PERHAPS one impelling reason for attempts at communicating with the dead is curiosity or the hope of learning a cause for strange actions and statements of the deceased while alive. Sometimes the motive borders on the spiteful; the incoherence of the dead gives to a few of the living the first opportunity for the last word.

Efforts to talk with those beyond the grave thus far have produced only Delphic replies. Twitching mediums and scrawly ouija boards report statements strangely out of keeping with the earthly characters of the dear departed. The greatest of rounders while alive may be enjoying the company of the saints. The most illiterate tell of highly intellectual goings on with Shakespeare, Milton and Louisa May Alcott. And when business matters are brought up the medium passes along some of the crookedest stock tips.

Out of such essays at communication nothing of homely interest ever comes from the dead. The living are not told where to find the key to the attic closet. Ether, ectoplasm and tipping tables are mysteriously reticent about intimate family matters.

Few people could be more anxious to penetrate the silence of the grave than Mrs. Margaret Barnes of Manchester, England. More than anything else she would like to know whether her late husband meant it, or was he fooling—and if the latter, why.

JAMES BARNES, her husband, was a pilot on the Manchester Ship Canal, which was a somewhat prominent profession. His countrymen have the reputation of dressing for their parts, and this characteristic extends to the sea and ships. One sure sign of an English port is the appearance of tugs and tenders that meet a liner. Across each diminutive vessel is a navigator's bridge, seemingly almost as large as that of the transatlantic ship, and which gives to the individual pacing it the dignity of a liner's captain.

And to be a pilot on the stretch of canal between the Liverpool docks and Manchester's clattering mills sometimes involves as much responsibility as comes to those who toss in tiny pilot boats off great ocean ports. A ship with her stem poked into the bank of the raging canal can be just as stranded as when caught on a reef. And whether the scene is canal, river, harbor or high seas—a collision is a collision.

From rewards from such possibilities Pilot Barnes had saved he died between £5,000 and £6,000. Five years before he signed a will dividing this amount between Maggie, his wife, two sons by a former marriage, and two children of a dead son now dead. But after his death in 1925 Maggie Barnes found in the bottom of a wardrobe an empty envelope on which was written with an indelible pencil in her husband's hand: "Dec. 1925. Mag. Everything to you. J. B."

INTO the solemn atmosphere of the English court of probate Lord President on the bench appearing like the King of Clubs in his robes and cascading white wig, with barristers bobbing about in their gowns and white pigtails, a strange subject was formally introduced. The "document" and as the last will and testament of James Barnes, pilot, of Manchester. An empty envelope was passed from hand to hand while lawyers contended and the Lord President gravely pronounced.

In behalf of Widow Barnes it was proclaimed that the writing on the envelope showed Barnes's wish for his wife to receive his entire estate, and that was as much as the deceased was required to do. The unwitnessed "document" could be ignored in the classification of a will. Counsel for other relatives held that whether sailing the Manchester Ship Canal could be construed as a "voyage."

The deceased, pronounced the President, was familiar with the method of making a landmark, for he had made one. In order to write a disposal of one's estate on an eggshell struck the court as one of the most grotesque possibilities which could be conceived as the act of a man engaged in one of the most serious undertakings of life.

Nor did the Court concede that the communication on the eggshell was a "testamentary disposition made by a mariner or seaman at sea." It was not established that the "document" was anything more than the complained freak, declared the President, and "the suggestion that a pilot on board ship should be unable to find a blown egg and put the date on it was a tax upon one's credulity."

AN AMERICAN RUBBER EMPIRE RISES IN AFRICA

Colossal Enterprise in Liberia to Conquer and Cultivate 1,000,000 Acres

By JAMES C. YOUNG.

THE first attempt on a large scale to free the United States from the domination of British and Dutch rubber planters has been successfully launched in the tangled forests of Liberia. White engineers and black laborers are building roads, clearing away masses of jungle growth, selecting seeds and planting saplings, meanwhile introducing a new phase of life to this primitive part of sun-baked Africa, a few degrees above the Equator. And in Akron, Ohio, several thousand miles away from the scene of operations, sits Harvey Firestone, the directing genius of this huge enterprise. Mr. Firestone compelled the imagination and, with others in the automobile industry, the capital, that American motorists might ride upon American-grown rubber.

Recently the Liberian Legislature ratified the agreement whereby the Firestone interests were to lease 1,000,000 acres of land for rubber growing, but this was largely a formality. The new rubber empire is already a fact. Thousands of trees have been planted and will yield five years hence. This year 100,000 pounds of rubber were obtained monthly from a plantation established by British interests and now the nucleus of the greater development. Ultimate production from the million acres is expected to approach 250,000 tons a year, more than one-half of the present American consumption.

The hand of civilization has at last touched Liberia, a country without railroads, without roads. For a thousand miles in either direction along the coast there is no worth-while port. Occasionally, a tramp steamer creeps in through the glassy swell and lets go her anchor with a rattle of chains off Monrovia, Liberia's capital, Monrovia. Then there is a great ado, and small boats put out from shore, laden with calabashes, native fruits and such trifles as crocodile teeth for milady's necklace. Otherwise, Liberia remains much as it was in the beginning, remote from the world of today, an empire awaiting its builder.

That Work Only Begun.

Now the builder has appeared and work has begun. It will go on for unmeasured years. At least a decade of effort will be needed before the possibilities are even slightly realized. In time besides the rubber production of Liberia should begin to take rank with the Dutch and British plantations in the East Indies.

When the Liberian enterprise is fully launched, Mr. Firestone may sit in his office in Akron and give his orders by radio to the Liberian staff. One of the first installations will be a system of radio communication between the various plantations. As soon as practicable a transatlantic station is to be installed, keeping the Akron headquarters in touch with field operations. One may imagine the day when frequent reports will be sent by radio, a bookkeeper in Akron adding together the figures of production almost at the same time as the facts are recorded in Liberia.

The man sitting behind the big desk in the quiet office at Akron is known in the rubber business for the quality of imagination. His colleagues say that he has always "thought ahead" of his industry. Back in the days when he started out as a salesman, his "line" included such things as cough syrup and Arabian oil. But rubber would seem to have been the intended medium of his business destiny. He drifted into the manufacturing of rubber tires for vehicles before the horse and buggy surrendered to the flivver. Presently the first automobile came into use and by gravitation the Firestone tire business tended toward the motor field.

What Started It.

Mr. Firestone determined upon the Liberian enterprise because of the conviction that rubber was costing American users too high a price. This year total imports reached 412,514 tons, costing $557,564,000 or 60 cents a pound.

The world has heard much of the British restriction plan by which production in the Far East is limited to minimum market requirements. Dutch and British plantation owners control no less than 95 per cent. of the world's supply. Growth and export are so regulated by the British that the market for several years has received no more than a measured quantity at any time. The Dutch have expanded their output at the expense of British growers and American buyers, but this expansion has not been sufficient to counteract British control and the inevitable high cost of rubber. It should be borne in mind that America consumes about three-fourths of the world production.

Not so many years ago Brazil furnished most of the world's supply of rubber, but some of the hevea seeds were sent to Britain and eventually British capital went heavily into rubber plantations in Asia. Brazil no longer has any important influence in the rubber market. The larger part of her production comes from wild trees. Plantation developments are scattered and other factors contribute to make the South American sources of doubtful value.

"We decided to open a new field," said Mr. Firestone, "but where to start was a problem of no slight difficulty. We sat down with maps of the world before us and cast about for likely spots to undertake surveys. Hevea rubber, you know, will grow only within a few degrees of the Equator, so we drew a line around the centre of the world, varying no more than ten degrees on either side, and looked at the map to see what we could find. It was plain that Central and South America lay close at hand. There were excellent fields in both areas. Exploration parties reported favorably upon physical conditions, but political and labor troubles discouraged us in that direction.

"Then we looked toward our own Philippines. Again political difficulties made prospects unattractive. We sent parties into Malaysia and Africa, scouting along the Equator, to find a rubber zone. Many possibilities developed in the East. We gave some of them serious consideration. Then reports from agents in Liberia turned attention sharply to this little known country. That was almost five years ago. Since then we have carried on explorations and negotiations, which finally have reached a conclusion. The terms of a grant made to us by the Government permit the planting of 1,000,000 acres distributed about the country wherever we find the best land.

10,000-Acre Units.

"Of course, we shall not be able to accomplish so big a task in a short while. Our present plan calls for five plantations of 10,000 acres or more as a first unit. Then we expect to add other acreage as needed. We have 2,000 acres of bearing trees not far from Monrovia. This plantation was set out by the British in 1910 and abandoned during the war, when it was restored to the Government. At the time we took it over the jungle had again grown up around the rubber trees, but the trees were in fine condition, actually yielding more of the rubber fluid than plantation trees in the East. We expect an average yield of 500 pounds to the acre. Careful planting and selection of seeds should give us some acres yielding 1,000 pounds or more.

"In our first plantation we have been provided with a nursery of sturdy growth. Seeds from these trees are being planted in five other plantations, one of 25,000 acres, two others are ready for planting and we shall go ahead with our program as fast as possible. This year we have set out about 10,000 acres. As our organization grows we will increase the plan of operations along constantly broadening lines."

In this summary Mr. Firestone touched merely upon the barest facts of the enterprise. Nothing of the kind has been undertaken by American business since the pioneering days of railroad building. Construction of the Union Pacific across the Far West was an enterprise of such heroic scope. Building of the Panama Canal was another undertaking of this monumental order. Cecil Rhodes did something of the sort in South Africa, but American business never has embarked upon any similar task of quite so colossal proportions.

One hundred million dollars has been mentioned as the prospective investment, an arbitrary figure that may be multiplied or reduced as occasion requires. The definite fact is that the Firestone organization has gone into a country until recently without a single highway, undertaking to create the surroundings and provide the auxiliaries necessary for a broad-scale operation. Requirements have been found to range all the way from bath tubs to a radio system that shall span the ocean.

In order to comprehend the sweep of the enterprise, it is necessary to go back a little way. The first quarter of the last century found increasing numbers of freed slaves creating a social and political problem in the Northern States of America. The American Colonization Society was formed in 1816 to return as many as possible to Africa. The story of the Liberian settlement is an almost forgotten story into which are woven the hardships of long voyages, hostile natives and precarious existence in a savage land.

When these settlers arrived upon the West Coast of Africa, it was a region of vague boundaries and doubtful ownership. The nearest British and French adjusted boundaries and colonization began. The name Liberia was coined by American sponsors from liberty. Monrovia, the capital, took its name from President Monroe. One of the provinces still bears the familiar name of Maryland. Between fifteen and twenty thousand descendants of American negroes constitute the governing class. Often they are educated in the United States. By refundings in recent years, its Government bonds now are mostly held by Americans.

Some thirty or forty thousand natives who have fallen directly under this influence are said to be Christianized and living in accordance with Western conceptions. Probably 2,000,000 others represent varying degrees in the primitive scale, but the Firestone workers have found them of sound physique, willing and adaptable. Some tribes have considerable skill in handicraft.

The character of the Liberian natives is looked upon as one of the guarantees of success. Mr. Firestone pointed out that 5,000 of them were now employed and said he believed them more dependable than Asiatic labor. Others will be added as operations expand, and 300,000 will be needed to cultivate the full grant of land. That possibility is far in the future.

Experiment and observation have shown the soil, climate and rainfall of Liberia exactly suited to the cultivation of rubber. The country lies between four and six degrees north latitude and extends inward some 300 miles. It has four important rivers, rugged mountain ranges, a broad upland plateau and dense forests. In size the country is about the same area as Ohio.

Utterly Primitive Country.

When the Firestone organization began work there were no worth-while roads in the country. Forty miles of modern highway have been built and engineers are planning other stretches to link the plantations together and provide access to Monrovia from the interior. The waterways will be the principal means of transport for supplies. Plantations so far established lie within reach of the rivers. Development plans include the construction of breakwaters at the outlets of these rivers to provide port facilities. Equipment has reached Monrovia and there a modern harbor is to be built.

Northwest of Liberia lies the British territory of Sierra Leone and southeast is the Ivory Coast of the French. Here also may be found the Gold Coast, which has figured in many a romance. From these shores came the slaves whose descendants rule in Liberia. The coast is little changed since shipmasters traded beads for human beings in these waters or sent parties of men ashore in boats to bring back luckless captives. Not far from the site of Monrovia itself was Trade Town, once the shipping point for slaves gathered all over Western Africa. Happily, it was destroyed in the early period of Liberian settlement, when American warships aided the colonists.

A glance along the map in any direction stirs memories of these boyhood stories that made the hair rise. This coast was the lair of pirates and slave traders for two centuries. Back of it for thousands of miles lies Darkest Africa, almost unexplored today in many parts, shielding its secrets by impenetrable forests and vast deserts.

Leave the coast a few miles behind and the jungle has its own laws. From the great bend in the coast to the southeast come ivory, gold, palm oil and rubber, especially from the Belgian country. The trade runs into millions, though it is only a tithe of that to come.

Only 4,000 Miles Away.

The name of Liberia falls upon the ear as that of a far and mysterious land. Mysterious it may be, but the distance is surprisingly short, 500 miles further than from New York to Liverpool, or 4,000 miles in round figures. Rubber from the Firestone plantations can be brought across the Atlantic inside of twenty days. Against this time may be compared the forty to fifty days' voyage from the East Indies. Freight rates, insurance and other factors are expected to lower the cost of the Liberian product. These facts are especially pertinent at a moment when rubber ships are becoming the fastest cargo carriers on the seas.

Beginning about two years ago, the Firestone organization has sent men and equipment to Liberia by every ship. There are 100 Americans in the field and others are going. Almost every requirement of the white man's life must be provided for them. Monrovia, let it be remembered, has no corner hardware store and its first garage is still new enough to stir wonder.

"When our men began work they found that practically all the necessities of life must be brought from the outside," said Mr. Firestone.

"They had gone into a hinterland that offered almost nothing. The only connection with the world beyond was a British bank in Monrovia, a few traders and the ships that crept in between the reefs at times. But most of them were back in the bush and the call of a ship had little meaning.

"We began to get requests for many things that it would seem should be available anywhere. Others were more unusual. Most insistent of all was the demand for bath tubs. Accordingly, we shipped a number of them. Sanitation in Liberia differs from our ideas and the rivers are unsafe bathing places. So the bath tube must have been received with joy. But one man found a section of the necessary plumbing had failed to arrive. Not being a plumber, and having none within call, he found his bathing arrangements upset. We received a drawing which showed the missing section—an elbow of pipe I believe it was—and in a month or two the needed part reached him. Then I hope he had his bath in peace."

Force of Technical Men.

The preliminary force includes technical men of many kinds. By degrees this force will be increased until it is a regular engineering corps. The Firestone enterprise requires the full complement of skilled men necessary to such an undertaking as the Panama canal. Perhaps a regiment of sappers and miners in war time would be an equally fitting comparison.

"Since the waterways in Liberia cannot be used to any extent for bathing, it may be understood that the water is unsuited for drinking," said Mr. Firestone. "We have had to boil it so far or bring mineral water from America to supply the men. But we now have en route a force of well drillers, with electrical dynamos and motors to begin sinking wells on our several plantations. Before long, we shall have adequate water that we know to be pure.

"Liberia is not an unhealthy country. The men report a moderate climate and little fever, although it is close to the equator. I hope to induce the Harvard School of Tropical Medicine to establish a branch there. The school has a force in the field making a survey. It will deal not only with human afflictions in tropical countries, but plant diseases as well. We anticipate no serious difficulty in the matter of health, but want to be prepared against every need.

"Therefore we shall engage in extensive sanitary projects. At the moment we are installing ice machines for the men, laundry equipment, cooking apparatus and a commissary to supply everything they need.

"Attention also must be given to the natives. Liberia has been a country of scattered groups, and the food problem was not of pressing importance. But we are concentrating these groups and must feed them. Perhaps we shall engage in extensive farming as a minor issue of the whole enterprise. The difficulties attending early development may be indicated by the recent shipment of a lumber cargo from New Orleans to Monrovia. We are operating in a heavily wooded country, yet are compelled to ship lumber across the Atlantic. There is but one explanation—haste.

"We have sawmill equipment getting into operation, but meanwhile we need the timber. Accordingly, it is on the way, carried a matter of some 4,000 miles to a land that now hears the hum of its first saw."

Road Building Program.

The immediate building program is concerned especially with roads. "We have constructed forty miles of modern highways," said Mr. Firestone, "and our field equipment will include a full complement of road machinery, rock crushers, motor dumping trucks and so forth. About sixty automobiles and trucks make up our present fleet, soon to be enlarged. Every building operation requires supplies from distant points—every nail, every hammer, the smallest piece of material, must be transported thousands of miles.

"Heretofore the natives have confined their communication routes to paths through the timber. Burdens are carried upon their heads, and life centres about the kralls or villages. Thus we have literally invaded the wilderness.

"Liberia has many native rubber trees, but we have not collected the wild product, which is inferior to hevea rubber. Before culture can begin we must clear away the tangle of trees and undergrowth. Then expert planting is required. We consider that results up to date are more than we could reasonably have expected."

The Firestone undertaking will constitute the greatest American investment in the tropics and marks a departure in American business abroad. Americans have seldom engaged in extensive tropical enterprises, permitting even the near-by field of South America to go almost untouched.

World's Eyes on Experiment.

Every country with tropical possessions is watching the Liberian experiment, especially countries having large rubber interests. British success in the East has made it undesirable to attempt similar operations in Africa. The Belgian rubber trade from the Congo is a large source of wealth, but is insignificant compared to the British. Liberia, ideally placed as to climate and geographic situation, seems to have lain fallow for the American hand to realize its possibilities.

Next year the work will go forward at an accelerated pace, made possible by final negotiation of terms with the Liberian Government, and every American must watch with quickened interest the conquest of the jungle. Even those who are bound tight to their office chairs may be permitted to pause a moment and think of the struggle across far seas, carried on by an expeditionary force of pioneers. Here is a new chapter in the romance of the unconquered, made necessary because we, as a nation, prefer to ride on rubber.

MILLIONS MADE FROM 'CRAZY DREAM'

Romance of Eldridge R. Johnson, Who Recently Sold Interest In Talking Machine Company for a Huge Sum

LITTLE more than twenty-five years ago Eldridge R. Johnson hid himself daily in a tiny machine shop near the Delaware River waterfront at Camden, N. J. Out of this shop came "funny noises," according to the Camdenites of that day. The man was working on his "crazy invention," they said.

A few days ago the same Eldridge R. Johnson, President of the Victor Talking Machine Company, gave an option to New York bankers for the sale of his controlling interest in that corporation. The option covered 245,000 of the 348,863 shares of outstanding common stock, and the option price was $115 a share, a total of $28,175,000. That is only a part of what has come to Mr. Johnson from the "crazy invention" at which Camdenites of a generation ago scoffed.

Other things that it brought him were opportunities to reward the faith of those who were not scoffers; to present to the city of Camden Johnson Park and a library; to see a $40,000,000 company that grew out of his greasy little machine shop leaving his control with $20,000,000 in orders on its books and contributing to the industrial life of South Jersey.

Eldridge Johnson always was a puzzle to Camden; just as puzzling as was Walt Whitman while the "good gray poet" made his abode there. Camden could not quite understand either of them. Whitman, until after his death, was just a queer old man; Johnson, until his success, was the man with the "crazy invention"—to all, that is, except the few who cast their lot wieh him.

The Humble Beginning.

Back in 1900 Camden was not the city of 130,000 inhabitants it now is, with its towering factory chimneys and a $37,000,000 bridge giving access to Philadelphia. The waterfront section was marked by vacant spaces and small, cheaply constructed buildings. The Eldridge Johnson Machine Shop did not even face on a street, but stood in the rear of the Collings Carriage Company shops, which faced on Front Street between Market and Cooper Streets. It was an unpretentious, drab one-story structure.

Eldridge Johnson was not a machinist who worked by rote. He did not require blueprints for any odd piece of machine work that was required of him. He just took the job; listened to what his customer wanted, and did it. That was his reputation in Camden before he "began fooling with that crazy invention." But all the while he had his ear to the ground; an ear that heard the possibilities of a machine that would reproduce talk. Still working without blueprints, he began experimenting.

Capital was limited. The Camden machine business did not produce a notable revenue. But Mr. Johnson had a wealth of strength, an abundance of energy and an abiding faith in his ability to give to the world a machine that would reproduce tone without the scratching that had been the nemesis of early models, and a record that would stand the abuse of the average hous old. He himself was "sold" on the idea; but Camden collectively was not. Eldridge Johnson was ready to give of his full strength to the task, but could not give wealth, of which he had none.

Camden Capital Shy.

He guarded his secret, of course, as efforts brought results; but he needed money to perfect it. The Camden of that day was a Camden that had to be convinced before it parted with its money. Just what Mr. Johnson went through in those days will probably never be known. Camdenites knew Eldridge Johnson's genius for work, but they could not visualize the big thing he aspired to do. His experiments were conducted in a tiny compartment adjoining the machine shop, while the curious stood outside.

"He's in there, shouting and singing," they gossiped. "He's still fooling with that crazy invention."

Finally a weird-looking thing was taken from his shop and confided to the few men who were to form the nucleus of the organization. Experiments had been carried on with sums of $50 and $100 which came in through friends who believed in him; but it was not until the queer machine with its long horn had been made ready for operation that the company was formed. There were three other men who were willing to take the plunge, Albert T. Middleton, Charles K. Haddon of Haddonfield, N. J., and later A. L. Atkinson of Merchantville, N. J., who brought technical knowledge into the infant industry.

The tiny machine shop was abandoned and the newly formed company began business in a three-story brick factory building at Third and Cooper Streets. However, it was by no means as yet smooth sailing. Camden still wanted to be "shown" before investing in this intangible thing that didn't seem possible as a commercial proposition. The company needed money for continued experiments, for machinery to turn out the product its backers visioned. Some investors stepped forward with small sums.

Threw His Hat at It.

The story is told of one man who was invited to take stock in the company. Albert Middleton undertook to "show" him. He took one of the crude instruments to the man's home, set it atop the piano and started it playing.

"Did you invest?" the skeptic was asked recently.

"I did not," was the reply. "I heard that thing grinding out some kind of noise and I threw my hat at it and knocked it off the piano."

That case is typical of many. But there is another side. Albert Middleton and Charles K. Haddon had faith. They stood firmly beside the inventor during the trying periods, advancing their money, little as it was at times, until the invention began to bring in returns.

In 1902 another blow befell the group. Fire destroyed the building where the experiments were being made. But Mr. Johnson's backers by this time were convinced of the possibilities in store. Another plant was built in the same block, and it proved the cornerstone of the group of buildings, now numbering twelve, that covers six city blocks. In the new structure manufacture of the finished product began on a limited scale.

Success Is Realized.

With the development of a sales organization and a program of judicious advertising, business grew. "His Master's Voice" began to be heard throughout the land, and as the group of buildings grew Camden awoke to the fact that the man with the "crazy invention," who had sought aid in vain, had produced something notable. The town prospered. Big buildings went up, among them the company's large administration building, Camden's first skyscraper. And "old timers" began to realize that what they saw was only the nucleus of what was to come.

Camden, despite early skepticism, now enjoyed dividends. The army of workmen grew until, during the war (when the plant was devoted in part to airplane construction), more than 11,000 men and women were on the payroll. Since that period the plant has employed constantly from 5,000 to 8,000 persons.

All through these years Eldridge R. Johnson has been the guiding spirit. He watched each development carefully—as carefully as in the days when he watched each successive step in the development of his idea. From the greasy little machine shop has come a remarkable industry.

With the retirement of Eldridge Johnson's influence from the organized, through the exercise of the option, the minority stockholders also will have opportunity to retire from the company on the terms of the Johnson deal. The President of the company stipulated that the New York bankers holding the option—Speyer & Co. and J. & W. Seligman & Co.—should purchase the remaining stock offered at the same price paid for his, $115 a share.

The Johnson influence still will be felt in the organization. Some of the officials who have seen the phenomenal development of the business will continue with it. Among them are B. G. Royal, Eldridge R. F. Johnson (the founder's son) and E. E. Shumaker, Vice Presidents; Edward K. McEwan, Secretary; Walter J. Staats, Treasurer; Walter H. Hunt, Assistant Secretary; E. C. Grimley, Assistant Treasurer and Controller; Frank B. Middleton Jr. and Eugene Haines, Assistant Treasurers. Only Eldridge Johnson himself, whose health recently has not been good, will be out of the active picture.

USELESS GERMAN LAWS MAY BE REPEALED

THOSE who deplore the multiplicity of laws and ordinances in America may well take heart when they contemplate the state of affairs in Germany. The Frankfurter Zeitung announces, with unconcealed gratification, that the Ministry of the Interior holds out a prospect of the repeal of no fewer than a million police orders—a whole million—every one having, of course, the full force of law.

Among these are many that are more than a hundred years old. There are also many that contradict each other—a circumstance due to the fact that the police could not keep track of the orders that had been issued, and thus often promulgated some quite contrary to those already existing.

It need not be feared, one is told, that this wholesale cancellation will result in a paucity of police regulations. There will still be an abundance of them, it is said, for all purposes, over and above the discarded million. This clearing of the books, it seems, occurs not upon the demand of the people but rather for the sake of the police, who find themselves so enormously overburdened with the product of their own department.

ROOT CALLED BACK TO WORLD COURT STAGE

Award of Wilson Medal Focuses Attention on the Principal Author of the Tribunal Plan, Which Is Still the Cause of Great Controversy

By G. C. POORE.

THE announcement that the Woodrow Wilson Medal has been awarded to Elihu Root in recognition of his services to the cause of international peace in helping to create the World Court brings him dramatically into the struggle once more at the moment when the chances of America's participation have reached a critical stage.

President Coolidge announced in his recent Kansas City speech that the nations now members of the Court "have indicated that they are unwilling" to concur in the Senate's reservations, and that he did not intend to ask the Senate to modify its position. Nevertheless, the matter promises to be the subject of bitter debate again at the present session. Therefore, what Mr. Root will say when he receives the award at a dinner in New York on Woodrow Wilson's birthday, Dec. 28, may be of momentous consequence, for he is perhaps the most widely respected of our elder statesmen, and he more than any other man is responsible for the existence of the Court in its present form. It is not probable that he will view with favor the possibility that the crowning achievement of his lifetime may be cast aside.

For six years the question of America's membership in the League of Nations and then of an international court of justice has been one of the stormiest issues in national politics, and through that troubled time Elihu Root has stood out as the leading advocate of the tribunal. He is credited with having written the plank in the 1920 Republican platform which turned the Republican Party against the League of Nations definitely, reservations or no reservations, and in favor of a new association of nations.

During the Summer he went to The Hague, at the invitation of the Council of the League of Nations, to assist in the drawing up of the plans for the Permanent Court of International Justice, provided for in the Covenant of the League.

Statesmen, such as Mr. Root, realized years ago that if nations were not to resort to war to settle their disputes, a system must be established to settle economic and political controversies by resort to reason and negotiation and to settle judicial questions by resort to a court of law.

A system for international cooperation has been established by the League of Nations which can deal with all controversies except those of a justiciable character. While the World Court is in a sense an individual body, it is part of the peace machinery required in a world to be organized for peace. The World Court cannot substitute the functions of the League, but it is one of the instrumentalities used by the League in the settlement of disputes when judicial decisions may be rendered.

Harding Urges Membership.

Some time after the Republican Party came into power the proposal to join the Court was submitted to Congress for its consideration, and from then until now it has been the subject of acrimonious debate. A succession of official pronouncements have dealt with the subject. On Oct. 30, 1922, Secretary Hughes said that he believed that "suitable arrangements can be made for the participation by this Government" in the work of the World Court. That was before the four-year Congressional battle had begun, before the clouds of difficulties had begun to envelop the issue.

It was on Feb. 24, 1923, that President Harding sent to the Senate a special message urging its speedy "consent to our adhesion to the protocol" (necessary since America was not a member of the League) and to the statute creating the Court, in order that we might "remind the world anew that we are ready for our proper part in furthering peace and adding to stability in world affairs." He added then certain recommendations made by Secretary Hughes to indicate how, "with certain reservations, we may fully adhere and participate * * * and remain wholly free from any legal relation to the League or assumption of obligations under the League."

The World Court was thenceforth officially before the Senate. As indicated in President Harding's message, sentiment was wholly favorable to the Court itself; the only safeguards then thought necessary were directed against the League, which had been repudiated by the Administration.

After President Harding's death President Coolidge continued his policies, and in his message to Congress on Dec. 6, 1923, he said:

"As I wish to see a court established and as the proposal presents the only practical plan on which many nations have ever agreed, though it may not meet every desire, I therefore commend it to the favorable consideration of the Senate, with the proposed reservations clearly indicating our refusal to adhere to the League of Nations."

Then, in an address on May 30, 1924, he reaffirmed his stand, saying:

"More than a year ago President Harding proposed that the Senate should authorize our adherence to the protocol of the Permanent Court of International Justice, with certain conditions. His suggestion has already had my approval. On that I stand. I should not oppose other reservations, but any material changes which would not probably receive the consent of the many other nations would be impracticable."

The Objections Begin.

In his message of Dec. 3, 1924, he once more repeated his recommendation, adding a condition that this country "shall not be bound by advisory opinions which may be rendered by the Court upon questions which we have not voluntarily submitted for its judgment." In that last sentence appears the beginning of the objections to the Court, as constituted, aside from its connection with the League. Moreover, it may be regarded, essentially, as an objection to the aspect of compulsory arbitration which Elihu Root had most strongly defended as a very necessary feature of a successful international court.

In the orginal draft of the Court which he helped to prepare that feature had been stressed, and subsequently modified by the Council. Mr. Root's view was clearly shown in his letter to Will Hays in 1920, when he said that "an agreement to arbitrate when parties choose to arbitrate is no agreement at all." Obviously his position and that of the Administration are diametrically opposed there, and that is one of the chief reasons why the expected forthcoming expression of his views is awaited with interest.

To understand why Mr. Root is a champion of compulsory arbitration it is necessary to review his work in behalf of international justice over a period that embraces most of his public career. Years ago when he entered McKinley's Cabinet it soon became apparent that he was a statesman with an international mind. Since then he has been asked to cooperate in the solution of many of the international problems in which America has become involved, and to him has usually gone the credit for the plan worked out. It was he who set up the Republic of Cuba, and he wrote the Magna Carta of the Philippine Civil Government. Then he handled our part in the suppression of the Boxer uprising in China and the arrangement of the indemnities.

As Secretary of State in Roosevelt's Cabinet he gave the Monroe Doctrine a new meaning throughout South America, and he contrived the celebrated "Gentlemen's Agreement" with Japan, which accomplished without ill-feeling the fact of Japanese exclusion, of which by direct legislation Congress had managed to make so sore a subject. Furthermore, he settled boundaries and fisheries disputes of long standing with Canada and Newfoundland, and signed with various nations a matter of forty reciprocity treaties. For his successful labors he received the Nobel Peace Prize in 1912.

This unequaled experience in international relations impressed him with the need for an international court, and when the second Hague conference on international law was called by the nations of the world in 1907 he was deeply interested. His views of what should be done are embodied in his instructions to the American delegates, in which he expressed himself in favor of "a development of the Hague Tribunal (which was then merely a panel of Judges at the disposal of nations wishing them to hear their disputes if the nations desired) into a permanent tribunal composed of Judges, judicial officers, and nothing else, who are paid adequate salaries, and who will devote their entire time to the trial and decision of international cases by judicial methods and under the sense of judicial responsibility." The court was created, but it remained in a passive state, and certainly not functioning as Elihu Root saw the need for such a court to do. It was merely a preliminary step in the right direction.

Mr. Root saw in the League of Nations another step in that direction, and he was in favor of our entering it with reservations. His objection was to Article X, and in a letter to Senator Lodge in 1919 he said:

"We can be of infinitely more value to the peace of the world by keeping out of all the petty and selfish quarrels that arise than we can by binding ourselves to take part in them. Just so far as it is necessary to modify this settled historic American policy in order to put into effect a practical plan for a league of nations we ought to go and we ought not to go one step further. The step proposed by Article X is not necessary for such a plan, and we ought not to take it."

The League Prepares.

In the end, the League was rejected, and the way was now clear for the establishment of such an international court as Mr. Root had long seen the need of.

While America was rejecting the League, the League was preparing to create the International Court of Justice provided for in the Covenant, and to draw up the plans a committee of international jurists representing the legal systems and modes of thought of the world was invited to meet at Geneva. Mr. Root was invited to become a member of that committee, and he accepted. He was not representing the United States officially, since the United States would have no traffic with the projects of the League. It was as a private citizen, and as one of the foremost figures in international law, that he attended the deliberations.

Without his assistance it is very probable that the Court would not before the bar of any contemplated court. But there could be but eleven Judges and four Deputies if the court was to be of practical value. How and where should these Judges be chosen? And whom would they represent? If each State were to have an equal voice in the selection, the small nations would control the choice. If the larger States, with their far greater populations and interests, controlled, the smaller nations would have no voice.

This simple but subborn difficulty continued to be an insuperable obstacle until Mr. Root solved the difficulty. He recommended that the nominations be made from among the different groups of nationals represented at the Hague Tribunal, that these nominations be sent for election to an electoral college composed of the Council and the Assembly of the League of Nations, where both great and small nations were adequately represented, and that the Judges thus chosen constitute the bench of the World Court.

In other words, Elihu Root cut the Gordian knot by taking the question of the selection of Judges out of the realm of politics altogether. The fault invariably found with the tribunals of the past had been that they tended to consider what was wisest and most expedient for the moment, in the interest of all parties. The arbitrators considered themselves, as Mr. Root himself observed, "to be under a diplomatic rather than a judicial obligation." Furthermore, Mr. Root said that "the difficulty was not that nations were unwilling to submit questions for judgment, but that they had not much faith in getting impartial Judges. They found that the arbitrators would go into negotiations as diplomats and no one could tell what would come out of it." And in referring to the court protocol which he had been helping to draw up, he said that it was "designed to differ from the ordinary arbitral tribunal in this respect. It was a court in which Judges would sit and proceed according to law and let the consequences take care of themselves."

These statements were made before the New York City Bar Association in 1920 after the committee of which Mr. Root had been a member had completed its work and submitted the plan to the Council of the League of Nations, which had not yet passed upon it. In that same speech he made another significant statement of his views, covering the question of obligatory arbitration. He explained that the Court as drawn by his committee contained a clause providing that if one nation failed to agree with another nation on a question of the interpretation of a treaty or some matter involving established principles of international law, that nation might bring a lawsuit against its adversary and force it to try the case before the International Court. That this aspect would arouse opposition he foresaw even then, and he said:

"Now this is a step in the process of civilization. All advances shock somebody. * * * The League now has this plan before it. I don't know what they're going to do with it. There may be so much opposition to the obligatory feature that they will strike it out. I don't know. I hope not."

Compulsory Jurisdiction.

His prophecy was fulfilled and his hope was disregarded. The League accepted practically the entire text of the Court as proposed by the committee—with the exception of the compulsory arbitration clause. It was held that this went further than the Covenant of the League, so it was stricken out. Instead, it was provided that those nations which wished to recognize the compulsory jurisdiction of the Court, and said so, might do so. But they were not forced to from the beginning. This denatured the original idea considerably, and Mr. Root was quoted at the time as being disappointed by the action he had foreseen.

This was the first reverse which the World Court received, but with this major alteration and some minor ones it was accepted by the League, and soon afterward began to function. When the time came to nominate Judges, five nations chose Mr. Root as their delegate, but he declined on the ground of advancing age.

When the question of American membership in the Court reached the Senate in 1923 the real barrage began, and this has continued to the present day. After months of debate the Senate, by a vote of 76 to 17, passed the Swanson resolution advising and consenting to the protocol, with five reservations, on Jan. 27, 1926. The House had already signified its endorsement by an overwhelming vote, 301 to 28, on March 3, 1925. The Senate reservations were now sent to the League for its consideration. They were as follows:

(1) That such adherence shall not be taken to involve any legal relation on the part of the United States to the League of Nations, or the assumption of any obligations by the United States under the Treaty of Versailles.

(2) That the United States shall be permitted to participate through representatives designated for the purpose and upon an equality with the other States, members, respectively, of the Council and Assembly of the League of Nations, in any and all proceedings of either the Council or the Assembly for the election of Judges or Deputy Judges of the Court, or for the filling of vacancies.

(3) That the United States will pay a fair share of the expenses of the Court, as determined and appropriated from time to time by the Congress of the United States.

(4) That the United States may at any time withdraw its adherents to the said protocol, and that the statute for the Court adjoined to the protocol shall not be amended without the consent of the United States.

(5) That the Court shall not render any advisory opinion, except publicly, after due notice to all States adhering to the Court and to all interested States, and after public hearing or opportunity for hearing given to any State concerned; nor shall it without the consent of the United States entertain any request for an advisory opinion touching any dispute or question in which the United States has an interest.

Resolved, further, as a part of this act of ratification, That the United States approve the protocol and statute herein above mentioned, with the understanding that recourse to the Court for the settlement of differences between the United States and any other State or States can be had only by agreement thereto through general or special treaties concluded between the parties in dispute; and

Resolved, further, That adherence to the said protocol and statute hereby approved shall not be so construed as to require the United States to depart from its traditional policy of not intruding upon, interfering with or entangling itself in the political questions or policy or internal administration of any foreign State; nor shall adherence to the said protocol and statute be construed to imply a relinquishment by the United States of its traditional attitude toward purely American questions.

Response to the Reservations.

The nations in the Court were duly advised of the Senate resolution. Five nations, Cuba, Greece, Albania, Liberia and Luxembourg, accepted the reservations. Two others, Santo Domingo and Uruguay, expressed themselves in favor of them.

The other powers belonging to the World Court formally appointed a committee to study the reservations, and that committee reported to the League, which considered its recommendations at Geneva on Sept. 23 last. Replying to the State Department, the powers expressed a general acceptance of the reservations but added that it had not been decided whether requests for advisory opinions necessitated unanimous or majority action, but that the United States could of course be guaranteed equality with States belonging to the League.

The clause in the fifth Senate reservation saying that the Court shall not render any advisory opinion except publicly, after due notice to all States adhering to the Court and to all interested, and that it shall not without the consent of the United States entertain any request for an advisory opinion touching any dispute or question in which the United States has or claims interest, raised a number of questions. The consensus was that the United States should have a veto, in those disputes in which it is a party—but in other disputes only a vote such as the other members enjoy. The members of the League believed, to put it another way, that the Senate reservations, if accepted in their entirety, would give the United States a special power enjoyed by no other members of the Court, and that would weaken both the Court and the League. It would mean that the United States would have a power stronger than any other in the League, if it could vote and every case it chose to, by the fact that it had an interest, no matter whether all the other powers voted it brought up or not.

Where the United States is one of the disputants the Court points out not at all willing to concede to it the right to prevent action if the League of Nations (or a majority wants the case to be submitted to the Court. They suggest that the reservation may rest on the right to the adoption of a request for an advisory opinion by the Council or Assembly of the League requiring unanimous vote. To which they add:

"No such presumption, however, has so far been established. It is therefore, impossible to say with certainty whether in some cases, or possibly in all cases, a decision by a majority would not sufficient. In any event, the United States should be given equality in this respect; that is to say, in any case where the United States represented on the Council or in the Assembly would possess the right of preventing, by opposition to action in these bodies, the adoption of a request to request an advisory opinion from the Court, the United States should enjoy an equivalent right."

Replies Essentially Alike.

Such, then, are the Geneva answers to the Senate's reservations. It is assumed that the replies of the individual countries are substantially the same in principle as the final document of the Geneva conference, which has already been signed by thirty-six nations. The fact that the British Imperial Conference, recently held in London, announced that it was in agreement with the Geneva reply substantiates that assumption.

President Coolidge's statement that he had no intention of asking the Senate to modify its reservations and that "unless the requirements of the Senate are met by the other [illegible] nations I can see no prospect of the country adhering to the Court" is an answer to the decision of the Geneva conference. The next move, then, will not come from the Administration. The issue is far from dead. It is certain to be broached during the present session of Congress.

Meantime, there are other developments in which the Administration may find itself toward the establishment of America's place in international jurisdiction. President Coolidge was recently said to have the conviction that "the most valuable service the United States can perform at this juncture in behalf of world peace is to work for the codification of international law," and there is a feeling in Administration circles that a conference to that purpose may be called at The Hague in the near future. But the codification of international law is one of the vastest undertakings the mind of man can conceive, a project that would take years of work, by the ablest and most patient jurists in the world. Final decision on American participation in the World Court will hardly wait until after that is accomplished.

Therefore, the Court continues to hold the centre of the great international stage. It is a dramatic moment. After years of discord, even on the subject of the projection which is the crowning achievement of his career, the Wilson Foundation's cry of "Author! Author!" will bring Elihu Root out of the wings to receive the presentation of a medal honoring him for having taken so large a part in the writing of the piece. What will he say? What effect will his speech have?

It may be recalled that six years ago, on that Summer day when a committee of jurists which had assembled at The Hague completed its work, they announced that to Elihu Root the world was chiefly indebted for the plan which they had drawn. And in his reply Mr. Root said:

"Sometimes when you think you have reached the top of the mountain you fall down again, but this time I feel confident our work will stand.

The work has stood. All the nations of the earth except one are now sharing the fruits of that work. The one exception is the nation which provided the main author of that work.

MR. ROOT'S VIEWS ON THE WORLD COURT

THIS Court is the latest institution wrought out by the civilized world's general public opinion against war for the purpose of giving effect to that opinion. It is an essential and indispensable institution for the effectiveness of that opinion, and the proposal that the United States take part in supporting the Court should be welcomed as an opportunity by all the people who have been talking in favor of abolishing war and preventing war and outlawing war, but have not as yet arrived at any practical steps tending in that direction.—Article in Foreign Affairs, April, 1925.

It (the World Court) is for the first time in the world a real court for the decision of questions between nations.—From address delivered at Union League Club, May 18, 1923.

This treaty which made this Court secured a court which went just as far as all the backward and all the advanced nations could agree. That was nailed down. It provided for just as extensive jurisdiction as all the backward and all the advanced nations would agree to, and that is nailed down.—Same address as above.

*I believe that * * * the true method by which public right shall be established to control the affairs of nations is by law, and the enforcement of law according to the judgments of impartial tribunals.—From a letter to Will H. Hays published March 31, 1919.*

TOYS THAT INDICATE WEATHER STILL RELIED ON AS PROPHETS

IN spite of all the progress of science in forecasting the weather, many persons still hold faith in their own methods of prophecy. Rather than the most detailed weather report, give them a toy that changes color or dumnies that foretell the coming of sunshine or rain by walking out or retreating indoors. Demand still exists in New York for these homely instruments; many shops always keep them in stock.

A salable form today is a little flower pot containing a single blossom or a small bunch of flowers and bearing a tag with a verse to the effect that the weather will be good as long as the flower is blue, but a change to pink means rain. The little ornament cannot really tell anything about what the weather will be. It simply indicates what weather conditions are, since the chemicals with which its fabric have been treated change color in accordance with changes in atmospheric moisture.

The once-popular little girl whose dress changed color with the weather was a prophet of the same family, which may be called the chemical group. Another family depends for inspiration on the physical response of certain substances to weather conditions; the "weather house," of Swiss and Bavarian origin, is one of its most venerable members. This little house has a master and a mistress, each one having an entrance. If the weather is to be fair, the mistress comes out; if rain is promised, she goes inside and her husband takes his turn, equipped for wet weather. The movements of the couple are governed by a twisted string of catgut upon which is suspended the wooden platform on which they stand. When the atmosphere is moist, the catgut contracts and thus untwists, sending the man forth; but, when the atmosphere is dry, the string lengthens and twists again, swinging the woman out of her door.

The catgut string serves a little wooden monk, too, who pulls his cowl over his head if the atmosphere is moist and drops it back when the weather is dry. The seed of a geranium coiled around a pin furnishes the operating mechanism of an ancient plaster manikin that likewise tells of the weather by lifting or lowering his umbrella. A butterfly with a body of wild Egyptian oat beards is made with wings attached to a beard, and when this twists and untwists with changes in the weather it causes the butterfly to open or close its wings.

A considerable demand for tree frogs exists in the environs of New York, according to one pet shop. They are imported from Europe or brought up from Southern swamps. Their actions in coming out of water or diving to its depths are believed to forecast the weather twelve hours in advance.

TYPEWRITER REDUCES CHINESE TO ITS KEYBOARD DIMENSIONS

THE typewriter, by appearing in Chinese guise, adds another phase to its versatility. Whether the Chinese will quicken their measured pace and rattle off their picturesque diographs on the keys is a matter that challenges prediction, though other Western customs as foreign as this have been adopted by them, but it is reported that already the new typewriter with Chinese keyboard is proving useful for firms doing business with China.

The manufacture of a typewriter that would write in Chinese presented a special problem. The standard American typewriter has about eighty-four characters. But there are 40,000 in Chinese, and several hundred are necessary if one is to express himself in even the simplest terms. This meant an unwieldy keyboard. But aid in arrangement was received from a system devised by a Chinese student in this country some years ago. It was based on phonetic principles applied to the new need.

The typewriter already speaks a multitude of languages. About eight years ago it acquired Hebrew and, simultaneously, of necessity, a reverse carriage. The Hebrew typewriter has had a large sale, it is said, in Egypt, Turkey, New York, Boston and Palestine. Other models are fitted with Japanese, Russian, Greek and East Indian characters, and German script. Much of the variety of the printing press has been taken over, too, by the machine, which, in different [illegible] mens, writes in italics, Roman [illegible] Victoria, Old English and so on almost any kind of type may be had upon special order.

One of the typewriter companies recently received a request from a teacher of children with defective sight for a machine with type the children could read. She enclosed with the request a page from the books they used in the classroom, and the type of her machine was made to match the sample exactly.

Many typewriters do a number of labor-saving tricks. By means of special attachments they insert forms in the proper place, align them correctly and shift carbons at the touch of a lever. The machine that adds and subtracts has revolutionized bookkeeping. The typewriter has multiplied its uses and in the portable form has gone to work on the battlefield, above the clouds and in the remote parts of the world.

It has achieved all this improvement within a mere half century or so. There was a typewriter patented in England as early as 1714, and from then on inventors dallied with the idea; but the principles upon which the American typewriter of today is based were not applied until the 1870's.

DIVORCE ISSUE SURGES UP WITH NEW FORCE

Marriage Wrecks Reach the Highest Peak in the United States—Increasing Separations Are an Acute Problem Also in Other Lands

CUPID IS PUZZLED.

By F. W. WILSON.

THE whole world is today confronted by the simple questions, fundamental to organized society, namely, What shall be legal marriage and under what conditions, civil and religious, shall marriage be dissoluble or nullified? These questions have been forced to the front by four circumstances, all of them startling in their significance:

1. The latest returns of the census which show that in the United States the increase in the number of divorces has actually overtaken and surpassed the normal increase in the number of marriages solemnized.

2. The Marlborough case.

3. The cabled statements from Russia asserting that the Soviet Republic has reduced marriage to a mere registration, which may be signed by the parties at any time and at any time canceled.

4. The legislation in Turkey which purports to abolish polygamy and restrict the husband to one wife according to law—an approximation to Christian practice which, however, does not preclude easy divorce or secondary unions where the financial circumstances of the husband permit.

Problem in This Country.

For the United States the problem is most easily visualized by figures. In 1909 the number of divorces granted was 66,371. In 1925 the number was 175,491. The increase over twenty-five years was 119,120. The increase has been continuous and it still continues. In 1924 the number of divorces was 170,952. In twelve months it grew by 4,543.

During that twelve months the number of marriages increased from 1,176,318 to 1,181,838—an addition of 5,520 to the annual figure. For this twelve months, then, the increase in the number of divorces exceeded the increase in the number of marriages by 1,023.

The rate of divorce is usually computed at so many of such actions in the courts per thousand of population. In the United States the rate for the year 1922 was 1.36. In 1925 it was 1.52, an increase of .16, or 11.7 per cent. It means the difference between 148,554 divorces in 1922 and 175,495 divorces in 1925, an increase of 26,941 in the annual figures during three years.

In 1910 the census gave 341,000 persons divorced. By the year 1920 the number had been increased to 953,566. Today it is, let us say, 1,200,000.

These figures obviously understate the actual fact. They depend on the form filled in by the person himself and do not include persons who, after divorce, have remarried.

Those Immediately Affected.

In the twenty years 1900-1920 the number of divorces granted in the United States was 1,883,591. In round numbers the figure for the first quarter of the century has been 2,500,000. To every divorce there are two parties at least, and the number of such parties is thus 5,000,000. Assuming that there were no more than four children to every five marriages dissolved, the number of such children would be 2,000,000, bringing the total of persons directly affected by divorce to 7,000,000. From this total should be deducted deaths and duplications of divorce by persons who have applied several times to the courts. On the other hand, divorced persons frequently marry persons who are undivorced, and to such marriages children are born. In all such cases the family adds to the numbers originally concerned in the legal proceeding.

While, therefore, it is only possible roughly to estimate the total number of persons directly affected by the divorces of the last twenty-five years, as recorded, we shall not exaggerate if we put it at 5,000,000.

In 1925 the addition to this number was 350,000, or, reckoning children, nearly 500,000. And even allowing for deductions, as explained above, it is clear that divorce will shortly have affected a population exceeding that of New York City in numbers—this not reckoning the parents, brothers, sisters and friends of the parties directly involved.

Obviously it would be inaccurate to attribute the prevalence of divorce to those sensational cases in which actors and actresses on the stage and in the studios where films are produced appear with such prominence. These cases are, after all, comparatively few in number and each only counts one. The phenomenon is not local or attributable to any single section of the people. Immense numbers of law-abiding citizens, many of them holding positions of responsibility in commerce, the professions and politics, are personally identified with marriages so dissolved. There has arisen a social fact of a dimension and character wholly without parallel in English-speaking civilization.

Elaborate tables have been published setting out the record of the several States. We confine ourselves to the more important increases and decreases from the year 1924 to the year 1925, taking first the increases:

State.	1925.	1924.	Inc. P.C.
New Jersey	3,238	2,800	16.9
Ohio	13,686	11,946	14.4
North Dakota	439	377	16.4
South Dakota	686	611	12.3
Delaware	207	177	16.9
Dist. of Columb.	158	126	25.4
Florida	3,199	2,506	21.1
Mississippi	2,907	2,506	16.0
Oklahoma	7,242	6,423	12.8
Montana	1,200	1,083	11.3
Wyoming	688	590	16.6
New Mexico	558	498	12.0
Utah	1,029	827	22.9

In New York State the number of divorces was almost stationary. There were 4,622 in the year 1924 and 4,611 in the year 1925, a decrease of 0.2 per cent.

The substantial decreases have been:

State.	1925.	1924.	Dec. P.C.
Massachusetts	3,332	3,793	12.2
Rhode Island	692	900	23.1
Nebraska	1,338	1,896	29.5

For a single year these are large fluctuations. Broadly, it may be concluded that divorce flows downward to wherever it is thought that divorce is easiest. The main point is, however, that, in whatever State divorces may happen to have been granted, the total for all the States taken together is steadily rising. For most, if not all, States there is supposed to be a residential qualification, precedent to divorce, extending from one to three years. Residence is, of course, an elastic term.

Diverce and Marriage Ratio.

If in the year 1925 there were 1,181,838 marriages and 175,490 divorces, it follows that there was one divorce for every 6.7 marriages. It is the custom to interpret this as meaning that the average marriage continues for less than seven years. As a popular way of putting the case, this is doubtless impressive. But there are reasons why the deduction fails to satisfy strict actuarial tests. In 1920 the number of married persons was 43,000,000. The number of divorces in a year, though large, is only 175,000, and this is not enough to reduce the average continuance of marriage to under seven years. The above mathematical fallacy is explained, of course, by the fact that the ratio of one divorce to 6.7 marriages applies only to new marriages, not to marriages already in existence.

The ratio of divorce to marriage for the several States may be thus analyzed:

State.	Divorces.	Marriages.	Ratio.
Dist. of Columbia	158	5,633	35.7
New York	4,611	106,083	23.6
Maryland	1,614	25,447	15.7
North Carolina	1,576	23,337	14.8
Georgia	2,057	28,095	13.7
New Jersey	3,238	27,973	11.8
Louisiana	1,795	20,233	11.2
North Dakota	420	4,377	9.9
Connecticut	1,231	12,209	9.9
Mississippi	2,907	28,212	9.7
South Dakota	686	8,596	9.6
Massachusetts	3,332	31,238	9.3
West Virginia	1,918	17,724	9.2

Kansas	3,541	20,867	5.8
Illinois	13,822	79,904	5.7
Delaware	207	1,178	5.6
Utah	1,029	5,688	5.5
Iowa	4,112	21,924	5.3
California	10,824	55,090	5.1
Colorado	2,243	11,602	5.1
Maine	1,230	6,224	5.0
Indiana	7,463	36,828	4.9
Michigan	9,541	46,276	4.8
Texas	15,120	80,758	4.8
Idaho	919	4,194	4.5
Arizona	877	3,922	4.4
Washington	4,126	17,841	4.3
Montana	1,200	5,000	4.1
Missouri	9,438	39,949	4.1
Oklahoma	7,242	27,883	3.8
Ohio	13,686	52,317	3.8
Wyoming	688	1,893	2.8
Oregon	2,886	6,960	2.4
Nevada	1,082	1,122	1.0

It is at once apparent that divorce, whatever view be taken of it, is by no means to be regarded as the especial monopoly of wealthy and luxurious cities like New York. Agricultural States like Nevada, with a ratio of one divorce to one marriage, and Oregon with a ratio of one to 2.4, far surpass the record of the metropolis, which, despite her Broadway, her theatres, her hotels and her other iniquities has only a rate of one in 23.6.

The case of Nevada is peculiar, because that is the State that includes Reno, the Gretna Green of the divorcee. Strict arithmetic, however, shows that even with Reno, Nevada only grants 1,082 divorces. It is a number preposterously large for Nevada, but as an element in the figures for the United States it is negligible.

The question arises, therefore, whether the phenomenon thus observable in the United States is to be noticed also in other civilized countries. From Whitaker come the following statistics:

Divorces in	No.	Per 1,000 Pop.
Austria, 1921	5,231	0.85
Belgium, 1922	3,718	0.46
Denmark, 1922	1,308	0.40
England, 1921	3,464	0.08
France, 1922	33,000	0.82
Germany, 1921	30,216	0.51
Japan, 1923	53,073	0.91

It will be seen, then, that the rate of divorce in the United States has been about one-half higher than in Austria, France and in Japan—the nearest in this respect on the list. It was, at a recent date, seventeen times the rate for England.

In interpreting these comparisons it must be recognized that the prevalence of divorce depends not only on the standard of morals in society but also upon the facility with which divorces are to be obtained. The State of South Carolina grants no divorces at all. In Canada divorce is only granted by a Dominion court. In Britain, too, the law, though recently broadened, has been narrow in its terms and carefully, if sometimes unfairly, safeguarded.

Between all these countries and the United States there is also a broad distinction. In such countries the law of marriage, whether it be strict or lax, is at least uniform. But in the United States there are forty-nine codes of marriage and forty-nine jurisdictions administering those codes. It can hardly be doubted that apart from any other circumstance this multiplicity contributes to the magnitude of the resultant statistics.

Paris Not Included.

In passing it may be remarked that the totals of divorce do not include such actions taken in Paris or other foreign cities. The fact that in certain cases divorce is sought at a distance from the United States is easily to be explained by a natural desire of the parties to avoid publicity or by other special circumstances. But it is hardly to be argued that any one has to go to Paris for a divorce merely because he could not get a divorce nearer home. The number of divorces obtained abroad cannot be so large as materially to affect the figures already discussed. Not all of the divorces granted in France amount to one-fifth of the divorces granted in the United States.

The procedure in Paris was, for a time, simple. But it was expensive. The cost of travel and hotels, with a fee of $5,000 to the lawyers, placed the luxury outside the resources of the average purse. And as Prime Minister, M. Poincaré took measures to abate the scandal.

In the United States, other than South Carolina, the grounds of divorce are uniform only in the one respect—that they include adultery. Outside of adultery, the variations between the laws of the several States are so numerous that a summary of them only is possible. Among the reasons for divorce are grave moral offences, insanity, addiction to drugs and drink, desertion, physical incapacity, conviction for felony, certain diseases, a former marriage still existing, and, last but not least, cruelty. The charge of cruelty by a wife against a husband and by him undefended will often secure the desired relief. Cruelty so alleged and so admitted cannot be regarded in many cases as anything more than a form of incompatibility to which the parties agree.

Yet apart from all technicalities it has to be recognized that here is a problem by no means confined to the United States, one that is bringing mankind face to face with a great decision. While divorce is less prevalent in other countries than it is here, it is still often on the increase. That is true of Germany, of England and of Canada, to give three instances. The essential question is whether marriage is to continue to be a binding contract, civil or religious or both, or is to depend upon little if anything more compelling than the consent of the parties at any given moment, assisted by whatever may be the influence of public opinion.

The demand for one divorce law, to be enforced over the entire United States, is simply a demand for less divorce. In a sentence, the hope of those who make the demand is that divorce, if uniform, will be difficult. For this reason the demand, however logical it appears to be, is unpalatable to those who wish divorce to be easy.

The argument for easy divorce cannot be ignored. In the words of Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont, divorce, so far from carrying a stigma, is one of those "adjustments" by which human life is regulated.

There are serious thinkers and widely read writers (Bernard Shaw, for instance, and H. G. Wells) who contend that divorce is a long overdue liberation of the citizen from a bond that, when indissoluble, had been imposed upon society by religion. Strict marriage, so it is argued in these quarters, is a relic of that asceticism which denied all marriage to the clergy and to the monk and the nun. The rule of religion, so runs this reasoning, should only be imposed on those who choose to adhere to religion. It is natural that with the establishment of democracy the civil law of marriage should be distinct entirely from whatever may have been the canon law of the churches.

Also, it is pointed out that under a strict law of marriage there have been frequent breaches of the moral code. Among rich and poor alike many marriages, though they continued indissoluble, were not only a failure but a hypocrisy as well. In England there was no general divorce law at all until the year 1857. Each dissolution of marriage required a separate act of Parliament, of which the cost was prohibitive except to the rich. But from the throne downward the pledge of marriage was frequently broken.

The "advanced view" of marriage, preached by dramatists, essayists and novelists, is thus that the institution should be removed wholly from the surveillance of churches, applying their creeds and seeking to perpetuate their traditions.

Situation in Russia.

It is here, perhaps, that the comparison with Russia becomes apposite. According to Krilenko, the Public Prosecutor of the Soviet Republic, "free love is the ultimate aim of the Socialist State." Official statistics published last February show that in Leningrad there were 237 divorces for every 1,000 marriages, or one divorce for 4.2 marriages. That figure represents what has happened in a city where the marriage bond, as a bond, has been entirely abolished; where either party to a marriage can obtain a divorce at any time by paying an equivalent of $2. The comparative figure for the United States is one divorce to 6.7 marriages.

The question is, then, whether the churches on their side can base their claim for a stricter marriage, not merely on mystical appeals, which only affect their members, but on practical experience that society as a whole must respect as evidence. Russia is discovering how inconvenient are the results of abandoning a domestic system that, even if a burden in particular instances, fulfilled certain elemental needs of society. Demands for alimony clog the courts and the neglect of children by separated parents is causing grave concern. A reconstruction of the home, based on divorce, does not appear to be evident in Russia—or indeed anywhere else.

The case of the churches is that marriage, as celebrated in Christendom, is the long result of a struggle for consideration to womanhood, maintained for thousands of years by the Jewish people and later by the Christians who absorbed that tradition.

Reasons for Severance.

For divorce many reasons may be assigned; selfishness, sensuality, faults of temper, crime, a sordid conception of citizenship, unworthy social ambitions and genuine incompatibility. On behalf of the churches it is maintained that all these contributory causes are, or ought to be, mitigated by religious fellowship.

In support of this plea there is produced evidence not easy to combat. The comparatively low rate for divorce in a city so brilliant as New York cannot be wholly dissociated from the fact that one-third of the population is Roman Catholic and another third of Jewish origin. The strong Catholicity of Quebec, coupled with the strict Protestantism of Ontario, has undoubtedly maintained the public opinion of Canada. In Ireland, up to the present time the problem of divorce has scarcely existed.

Whether or not there should be stricter divorce or easier divorce may be an open question. But no reasonable person doubts that there ought to be more difficult marriage.

Marriages contracted with the knowledge of parents and celebrated with reverence after due betrothal in the presence of the families and friends of the bride and bridegroom are less likely to break down later than are marriages, whether civil or religious, that have been hastily solemnized as a result of a clandestine impulse.

In the Lutheran Church, a questionnaire recently elicited the information that from 68,559 marriages performed by 527 pastors only 1,073 divorces had, so far as was known, resulted—or one divorce to 68 marriages.

England's Divorce Law.

The law in England is simple. Even for a civil marriage, one week's known residence is required of each party for a certificate and twenty-one clear days must intervene between the certificate and the ceremony. It is true that immediate marriage can be secured by special license; this costs £50, or $250. There is no doubt that the insistence upon a three weeks' period of reflection before the final step is taken has proved to be an invaluable safeguard against the marrying in haste which so often leads to repentance at leisure.

Under the conditions of coeducation it would seem that a statutory interval of this kind would be yet more valuable. Marriages contracted by graduates from college at a later than school age appear to be in most cases lasting. According to the inquiries of the Russell Sage Foundation subsequent divorce is due in many cases to the grant of licenses to minor children, sometimes no more than 11 years of age. That the ages are often falsified is doubtless true, but such falsification is not always necessary. There are many States where girls of 12 to 16 years of age can be married with the parents' consent. Today there are 700,000 persons who were under 16 years of age when married or who married some one under 16.

That the presence of an immense divorced population has caused embarrassment to religious bodies is obvious. The Marlborough case is merely one of innumerable instances in which a church has sought to meet a grave perplexity. But there is inherent in this situation an issue of importance far beyond the range of ecclesiastical controversy.

COTTON'S ORACLE NEVER HAS SPECULATED

Colonel H. G. Hester, Whose Reports Sway Markets, Reveals His Formula

NEW ORLEANS, LA.

EVERY workday morning at 10 an 80-year-old man seats himself at his desk in the Cotton Exchange Building in New Orleans's financial district and briskly starts dictating telegrams. The result of his work is felt all over the world wherever a bale of cotton is raised, or bought or sold. He is Colonel Henry G. Hester, and for fifty-six years he has been Secretary and Superintendent of the New Orleans Cotton Exchange.

Daily Colonel Hester sends and receives upward of a hundred telegrams and cablegrams, relating to cotton that has "come into sight," "mill takings" and exports. Into his desk flows a volume of cotton information, and this he gives to the world weekly in "Hester's Report," without which no man in the cotton business would think of doing business. It is said that he is the only man whose individual unchecked figures the United States Government accepts as official. In all the years he has been a cotton authority he has never owned a bale or speculated a cent in the future markets.

Two words mean much in the cotton market:

"Hester says——"

"What Does Hester Say?"

His weekly report comes out every Friday. That day all over the world men ask: "What does Hester say?" in a score of tongues. They ask it in every cotton market and exchange in America, in Liverpool, in France and Germany, in Spain and Russia, in Egypt and India and Japan. And they never doubt the answer; for wherever men deal in cotton they chuckle at Colonel Hester's axiom.

"Two plus two equals four," he says. "Half the people I know spend their lives trying to make it equal three and three-quarters or four and one-quarter. Sometimes they seem to do it. When they do, I know they're wrong."

In 1915, just after the World War broke, cotton was bankrupt; the "buy-a-bale" movement swept the South and cotton went down to 6 cents a pound.

At noon one day Colonel Hester sat at his desk checking figures. Various experts had estimated that cotton consumption that year could be only 12,000,000 bales. Colonel Hester's total showed takings of 14,000,000 bales.

Most Important Announcement.

"I went down on the Cotton Exchange floor after telegraphing my figures to the New York Cotton Exchange," said the Colonel. "It was a mighty hot day. Most of the members were out at lunch or having a drink at the Boston Club. I mounted the rostrum and announced the 14,000,000-bale consumption. Nobody paid much attention. I stepped down, gave the figures to the boy to put on the board, watched him chalk them up. Still nobody showed any interest.

"Walking out, I stopped beside a member. 'That's the most important announcement I ever made in my life,' I told him. 'Why?' he asked, looking at the figures. I answered: 'You just watch what comes off the New York wires in the next hour, and you'll see why.'"

They saw why. Cotton climbed from its low, sagged, rose again, sagged again, but climbed after every setback and at last perched high—above 40 cents a pound.

Colonel Hester knew what would happen. Had he whispered to a friend before he telegraphed and posted those figures, $1,000,000 would have been a moderate estimate of his winnings, he admits.

"But I didn't," he said. "I never owned a bale of cotton in my life. I never speculated a copper cent in the market. If any man on my office staff didn't back me up in firing him, I'd quit the job myself. We aren't millionaires in this office, but we've got honor." Thus briefly he summed it up.

Only a few weeks ago another cotton crisis loomed. Cotton came out of the market page into Page 1 headlines. The directors of the New Orleans Cotton Exchange called a special meeting and asked that Colonel Hester make a public statement. And the Colonel, whose optimism is founded on common sense, put his opinion on the wires.

Colonel Henry G. Hester.

"Just now I believe the world is willing to take more of our cotton than we can give it at 15 cents a pound or over, but it will gladly take it at less if we are insane enough to let it have it. Panics are mental, usually, in a rich country like America; born of unreasoning fears. Calm consideration will show to the men of the South that their fears are without foundation. Whenever the world is brought to believe that we will not let it have our cotton for less than 15 cents a pound it will willingly and eagerly pay that price."

An Old-Timer Up-to-Date.

What sort of a man is Colonel Hester? Short, stocky, with silver-white hair, a ruddy face, keen blue eyes behind rimless spectacles, a resonant voice.

"The business men of today, compared with those of fifty years ago, are different as daylight from dark," he said. "The slow, methodical ways of the past have given way to push and activity. Business no longer seeks given channels from force of habit. It must be fought for and retained by keen competition. Radio, improvements in telegraphy and steam, telephone, other electrical control, have almost annihilated time and space. When I entered this work it took days to gain an object or obtain information. Now it takes hours, minutes, sometimes fractions of a minute. The civilized world has been knit so closely that from a business standpoint it is almost one vast stretch without barriers.

"The old-time merchant thought in thousands. The merchant of today thinks and acts in millions. Were it possible for the giants of my youth to return to modern life they would have to start at the bottom to adapt themselves to the methods of today. I remember one who saved $3.98 by writing New York to cover his cotton, instead of telegraphing. The market dropped while the letter traveled. He lost $2,000. The New Orleans Cotton Exchange is a Golgotha, white with the business skulls of those who would not look ahead."

When a Man Is Old.

"When a man commences to think he is old, be he 50, 60 or 70, or over, he is old," the veteran says, "and inevitably his thoughts affect his body. This is a truism. The Good Master said: 'Take no thought for your life, what ye shall eat or what ye shall drink; nor yet for your body, what ye shall put on. Is not life more than meat and the body than raiment?'"

Young New Orleans men have a habit of asking Colonel Hester for advice. His message to them is uniform:

"No matter what your station in life, always remember there is abundant room higher up. Bend your energies to whatever may be the work at hand. Keep in mind that pay-day, while most desirable and convenient, is not the most important day of the month or week. Don't worry about your future. It will take care of itself. For the man who makes himself fit, there is always room higher up. There is a constant demand for men of that kind, but not for the man who thinks he knows it all and is unwilling to learn. For the right kind there is always a demand. And while at times advancement may appear slow, it is sure to come and remain permanent. I have learned that from a lifetime in business."

SANTA CLAUS CLAIMED AS A REAL NEW YORKER

St. Nicholas Came Here as a Dutch Immigrant, but in 300 Years of Americanization He Has Changed In Face, Form and Habits

By EUNICE FULLER BARNARD.

SANTA CLAUS is peculiarly New York's own. Not only did he land here in Manhattan with the Dutch settlers three hundred years ago, but for almost two centuries he never took his presents out of the State. Here, in the genial company of Washington Irving, James Kirke Paulding and Clement Clarke Moore, he gradually changed the stern, gaunt aspect he had brought from Holland to his present bulging and benevolent mien. Here, too, a century ago he acquired his reindeer sleigh and his habit of coming on Christmas instead of on the Dutch St. Nicholas eve (Dec. 5). And, thus, in his New York panoply, he has finally found his way to all parts of the United States, to England, and even Australia and India.

Indeed, in the beginning, New York, as New Amsterdam, was dedicated to Santa Claus, or St. Nicholas, by its Dutch founders. For Santa Claus—or Sinterklaas, as it is sometimes written in Holland—is, of course, only the centuries-old pet name which Dutch children have given to their friend and gift bringer, the good Bishop-Saint Nicholas. And it is said that the ship which brought the first Dutch children to Manhattan Island bore his face as figurehead. From the first, too, his special day of Dec. 6 was set aside along with Christmas, New Year's, Easter and Whitsuntide, as one of the five chief holidays of the new colony, just as it had been in Holland.

So, year after year, as regularly as St. Nicholas eve came around, in New Amsterdam, in Breuckelen (Brooklyn), in Fort Orange (Albany) and many another windmill-crowned hamlet above the icy Hudson, the children in every good Dutch family gathered in an expectant circle. For weeks beforehand they had learned their lessons and helped with the milking and churning in an agony of good behavior. And now, their eager faces scrubbed as pink as the fireplace tiles, they sang their song to Santa Claus.

The Real Dutch Santa.

In slightly differing Dutch versions that song has come down to us in various parts of New York State from Schenectady to Flatbush, but always substantially as it is given under the picture on this page. So it was sung in some old Knickerbocker families as late as 1851, and so it is still sung in Holland today.

In the midst of it would come a knocking at the door and in would stride Santa Claus himself—not round and jolly, but solemn and majestic in trailing robes. In one hand he might have a basket of presents or a purse, but in the other was sure to be a birch rod, an awful warning to a naughty boy. Each child, in turn, Santa Claus questioned about his behavior in the year gone by and gave him a pat of approval or a warning shake of the head. Then, bidding them all look for his presents in the morning, the good saint suddenly flung a handful of lollipops into the room, and in the ensuing scramble vanished into the street.

Then the children put their sabots, or later the great blue yarn stockings made for the purpose, in the chimney corner for Santa Claus to fill on his night ride over the housetops. Today, in Belgium and Holland, the children always tuck a carrot or bit of hay in their shoes for Santa Claus's faithful horse. For Santa Claus comes there in splendor, riding a fiery white charger and wearing a jeweled mitre and gloves. But in America, curiously enough, we have no record that Santa Claus ever rode a horse. Perhaps he had only his magic tabard, mentioned in the song, that could take him from place to place in a twinkling.

At any rate, he got about. For there, in the morning, over the hearth steaming with waffles and sausages and other good Dutch fare, were the blue stockings bulging with apples and oliekoeks, balls and dolls and tops. Only one stocking hung limp, holding nothing but the birch rod which the unlucky boy must wear to school in his buttonhole.

New Amsterdam Festivities.

Santa Claus eve and Santa Claus day were only the beginning of the Winter merry making in old New Amsterdam. For three of the five chief holidays on the official calendar came within the month. There was Christmas with its morning's turkey-shooting and family dinner parties. There was New Year's eve with bell ringing and gun firing, and the great festival of New Year's Day with its special Dutch feature of New Year's calls.

After 1673, when New Netherland finally became New York under the English, poor Santa Claus soon found his day entirely gone from the list of public holidays, and in his own colony, too! For while the English Governor and colonists in New York, unlike the Puritans of New England, were by that time ready to celebrate Christmas in the old English manner with holly and mistletoe, Yule logs and wassail, they paid no heed to Santa Claus.

But with or without an official holiday, the Knickerbockers still celebrated. For a time after the English occupation the observance of Santa Claus day had almost a political significance as a badge of loyalty to old Dutch custom. According to one authority, the first Santa Claus day after the British rule in New Amsterdam "all the Dutch citizens were decorated by their vrouwen with new orange-colored bands or ribbons on which was inscribed the old Dutch war-cry 'Orange Boven.'"

So, in spite of English rulers who did not believe in Santa Claus, the little New Yorkers of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries hung up their stockings on Dec. 5 as faithfully as ever, and New York newspapers up to the Revolution still had routine references to the day's celebration. For it must not be forgotten that the great majority of the population of the then existing twelve counties of New York State remained Dutch in blood and custom all through the Colonial period.

Perhaps it was the Revolution that affected Santa Claus. At any rate, it was not long afterward that he broke almost two centuries of conformity to Dutch tradition and suddenly emerged, a free and independent American character. Instead of being gaunt and severe, he became here in New York the scene of joviality, and so fat that he was never again much on walking or riding or being wafted by means of magic tabards. Instead, for many years he drove in a little wagon drawn by a fat pony. In place of his long robes he took to knee breeches and shoe buckles of the Dutch Colonial fashion. Soon he almost forgot that he had come on Dec. 5 and for almost half a century took to delivering his gifts on New Year's Eve.

A Much-Dutch-er Saint.

In short, he was no longer the Dutch saint as the Dutch colonists had imagined him. He was the much Dutch-er saint imagined by their English neighbors. It may have been the Dutch families' very loyalty to the old customs that was finally responsible for the new ones. For the more the Knickerbockers insisted on the old Dutch celebration of Santa Claus day, the more peculiarly a Dutch figure the saint himself seemed in the eyes of the other colonists. Finally, he became entirely confounded with his worshipers and was himself supposed to wear knickerbockers.

Whether Washington Irving followed an already accepted tradition or whether he first created this new genial American Santa Claus is still a question. We only know that in 1809, in his whimsical "Knickerbocker's History of New York," he wrote the first description of his new character. When Irving set down the Dutch colonists for all future time as jovial, many-breeched, long-pipe smokers, he made their patron, St. Nicholas, the archetype of them all. He wore, according to Irving, a "low-brood-brimmed hat and a huge pair of Flemish trunk hose" as he rode "jollily" over the rooftops in a wagon, dropping magnificent presents down the chimneys of his favorites.

Though in later years Santa Claus again changed his costume and his equipage, one other idiosyncrasy which Irving gave him, along with his pipe and his good nature, he has never since laid aside in America. For "when," says the narrative, "Saint Nicholas had smoked his pipe, he twisted it in his hat band, and laying his finger beside his nose, gave a very significant look, then mounting his wagon, he returned over the treetops and disappeared." So it was only a paraphrase, an immortal paraphrase perhaps, when fourteen years later Clement Moore wrote:

Now after Irving's vignette followed a whole series of full-length portraits of this new Dutchman Santa Claus. Appropriately enough, it was Irving's friend and one-time collaborator, James Kirke Paulding, himself of Dutch blood, who became Santa Claus's chief delineator. In the "Book of St. Nicholas," which he first wrote in 1827, he made Santa Claus "as gallant a little Dutchman as ever smoked his way through the world, pipe foremost," and provided him with a whole wardrobe of Dutch costumes.

Paulding Describes Him.

"St. Nicholas," he said in a foreword, "scorns to follow the pestilent fashions of modern times, but ever appears in the ancient dress of the old patriarchs of Holland. * * *

"He is a right fat, roystering little fellow * * * dressed in a snuff-colored coat of goodly conceited dimensions, having broad skirts, cuffs mighty to behold, and buttons about the size of a moderate New Year's cooky. His waistcoat and breeches, of which he had a proper number, were of the same cloth and color; his hose of gray worsted; his shoes high-quartered, even up to the instep, ornamented with a pair of silver buckles exceedingly bright; his hat was of a low crown and a right broad brim, cocked up on one side; in the buttonholes of his coat was ensconced a long delft pipe, almost as black as ebony. His visage was the picture of good-humored benevolence, and by these marks I knew him as well as I knew the nose on my face."

But while, in Irving's time, apparently Santa Claus still often made his rounds on the eve of his own special day, Dec. 6, Paulding and his contemporaries, writing some twenty years later, refer to him as the "genius of the jolly New Year." Moreover, in a rural New York monthly, as late as 1840, there is an account of a typical New York New Year's Day, with Santa Claus for the first time trimming the Christmas tree (so-called) instead of filling the stockings. Then, at noon, after all the fun that we now associate with Christmas was over, began the round of New Year's callers.

Yet, apparently, in all these years that Santa Claus and his gifts arrived so generally on New Year's eve, there was beginning a parallel tendency on his part to honor Christmas, and wise children prepared for him both days.

Even a quarter-century later, when Santa Claus had taken almost universally to coming on Christmas Eve and driving his reindeer, he still sometimes wore his Dutch clothes and remembered his Dutch origin. In a book called "Santa Claus Land," published in 1873, and still in circulation, two children who visited his home in the arctic regions found him dressed "like a queer little porcelain man that papa's great-grandfather had brought over from Holland."

Moore's Immortal Poem.

Yet this Dutchman Santa Claus of Irving, Paulding and their followers is not the Santa Claus of today. There is only one standard account of him, and that, as every child knows, is in another New Yorker's verse, "'Twas the Night Before Christmas." Yet that poem, which finally put Santa Claus's Dutch origin out of mind in America, was itself, by its author's own admission, inspired by a Dutchman, and was in its early days illustrated with a Dutch Santa Claus. Indeed, two of the reindeer were originally given Dutch names, "Dender and Blixen" (Blikseem), meaning thunder and lightning. It is only modern publishers who have rechristened them with the German "Donner and Blitzen."

The author of this definitive description of Santa Claus was the most unlikely persons to do it—the Rev. Clement Clarke Moore, Professor of Oriental Literature in the General Theological Seminary in this city, who was accustomed to write profound treatises on Hebrew and Sanskrit. This verse he is said to have composed in 1822, at his father's imposing tree-shaded country house in old Chelsea Village, at the corner of what is now Twenty-third Street and Ninth Avenue. He did it, he told an interviewer from the New York Historical Society forty years later, simply as a Christmas present for his two daughters, making St. Nicholas the hero at the suggestion of "a portly, rubicund Dutchman living in the neighborhood."

Even now, though the Dutchman Santa Claus is almost forgotten, we still rarely illustrate the character as Moore described him. Never, practically, is he shown as an elf, and never "dressed all in fur," but in the red coat and trousers that by general consent these forty years have somehow come to belong to Santa Claus. Indeed one conscientious publisher recently changed the text to correspond with the unchangeable illustrations, making it read;

Here then he is, the composite figure that New York has finally given to the rest of the English-speaking world. His jolly plumpness, his pipe and his knowing way he has from Washington Irving; his reindeer sleigh and his Christmas Eve coming from Clement Moore; his red, fur-trimmed costume from all of us who have ever dressed the part; and his gifts and his familiar name from the New York children of three hundred years ago whose baby faith first brought us Santa Claus.

GRAVE OF LOST ROMAN LEGIONS DISCOVERED IN GERMAN TOWN

Bits of Urns Thought to Mark Pyre Where Bones of Varus's Soldiers Were Burned

NEARLY 2,000 years ago the Empire of Rome received a severe blow when the Roman General Varus was defeated by the German leader, Arminius, in the Teutoburger Wald, a forest in the Province of Hanover, and lost many thousands of men. Today there is not much left of this once primeval forest; but on a wooded height stands a monument to Arminius, whose decisive victory temporarily freed Germany from the Roman invaders.

It was long thought that the monument marked the actual site of the battle. But a German scholar, Professor Knoke, who held other views, has had the good fortune to discover the site of two of Varus's camps near Osnabrück, close to the little town of Iburg.

It was after this disaster that Varus, on his return to Rome, was met by the Emperor with the bitter cry: "Varus, Varus, give me back by legions!" The defeated General committed suicide. Just as the exact site of the battlefield could not be determined, so the burial place of these thousands of Roman soldiers remained a mystery. Recently, however, a trench to carry a water main for the town of Iburg was being dug and the workmen turned up a Roman urn.

Professor Knoke was summoned from Osnabrück and began a systematic examination of the mound, which was one of many natural mounds and had therefore passed unobserved. The fact that the hillock is crowned by mighty trees prevented a thorough examination of the territory. Besides, a good deal of earth had been removed from the hillock at various times and a brook has washed away much of the elevation on one side.

The mound in its present state is about forty feet in diameter and ten feet high. The excavators discovered 130 burned fragments of burial urns and, on the other side of the hill, where the excavations could be carried out only in part, fifteen similar fragments were found.

In the interior of the hill, at a height of about five feet, remains of the funeral pyre were discovered. This was about thirty-five feet in extent. The bodies had evidently been laid upon a bed of stones, which had been quite disintegrated by the heat. All the pottery fragments show traces of having been formed on the potter's wheel, a contrivance unknown to the Germans in this part of Germany up to the time of Charles the Great.

Professor Knoke points out that since the Bronze Age the Germans had not erected barrows to their dead. Instead they buried the urns with the ashes in flat graveyards. The Franks later occupied the same territory. They were acquainted with the potter's wheel; but they did not cremate their dead, so that the builders of the Iburg barrow, it is deduced, can only have been Romans, who combined the custom of cremation with the custom of raising tumuli to the dead.

This burial hill was probably erected by Germanicus six years after the battle, according to Knoke.

Any further doubt as to the identity of this tumulus should, it is argued, be set at rest by the discovery of a copper shirt of mail and other portions of Roman armor. These finds are believed to have great historical and scientific value.

POLITICAL LAME DUCKS FACE A LOSS OF POWER

So Important Have They Become in the Affairs of Government That a Constitutional Amendment Is Proposed to Deal With Them

By RICHARD V. OULAHAN.

THERE are two species of lame duck: The bird and the human. The bird becomes lame usually through being winged by a sportsman. The bird is wild before being lamed; frequently the lameness tames him. In the human variety the duck sometimes does not become wild until winged.

The two varieties of the human lame duck are found in the stock exchange and politics. In stock exchange slang, a lame duck is a person unable to fulfill his financial engagements. In politics a lame duck is an elective public officer who has been defeated for re-election.

It is with the political lame duck that this article has to deal. Any opinion that the subject is frivolous or must be dealt with in a frivolous way is wide of the mark. The lame duck is an important part of our political system. The recent elections of Senators and Representatives in Congress have increased his importance.

The truth is that the lame duck has become so important that an effort is to be made to curtail the chief phase of his activities. The purpose of a proposed amendment to the Federal Constitution is to lame the lame duck again, perhaps kill him, in a figurative sense.

Objections to Lame Ducks.

Senators and Representatives who try at the polls for continuation in Congress and fail are the most advertised of political lame ducks. Under our present system of government they remain in Congress for four months after they have been lamed. Three months of this time is occupied by the final session of a Congress. In these three months the lame ducks, according to their critics, are able to exercise considerable influence in the enactment or rejection of legislation important to the country. Each has a vote. It is to curtail that influence that the proposed constitutional amendment is aimed.

Three times in our Constitutional history the election of a President of the United States has been thrown into Congress and each time lame ducks, that is, those Representatives who had been defeated in the elections held coincidentally with the Presidental election, had a part in determining who should live in the White House. It is to correct this state of affairs that the Constitutional amendment has been offered. The argument is that Representatives who have been repudiated by their constituencies are not qualified, within the meaning of the spirit of our democratic form of government, to determine who shall be the head of the nation.

Where there is no election of a Vice President, the Senate chooses the Vice President, and it is a Senate containing lame ducks that is entrusted under the Constitution with this important authority.

The general purpose of the proposed amendment is to abolish the so-called short session of Congress following the biennial Congressional elections in which one-third of the Senate's membership and the entire membership of the House of Representatives are chosen. With the amendment in effect, there would be no session of a Congress after any of these elections, which, every four years, are held concurrently with the election of a President and a Vice President.

With these elections held in November, except in Maine, where Senators and Representatives are voted for in September, there would be no Congressional session until the following January, when the new Congress would convene, according to the terms of the proposed amendment. All the members of the House and one-third of the members of the Senate would be fresh from the people and presumably would reflect current popular sentiment. The amendment contemplates also that the President and the Vice President shall be inaugurated in January instead of March 4, as at present.

Views on the Proposed Amendment.

There is opposition to having a new Congress meet so soon after its election. The contention is that to have to wait from the time the old Congress ends in March until the new Congress meets in the following December, a period of thirteen months after the elections, affords opportunity for reflection and prevents half-baked, emotional legislative action, born of the heat, the excitement and the animosities of the political campaign.

But appearances go to show that sentiment for having the new Congress meet soon after the elections is strong in the Senate and presumably strong in the House. At the last session of Congress a resolution providing for submitting to the States the proposed constitutional amendment was adopted in the Senate by the overwhelming vote of 73 to 3. A resolution of similar import has been favorably reported to the House, where it awaits a test.

Ardent advocates claim that back in 1922 the amendment, which had been adopted by the Senate, would have passed the House if Representative Phillip P. Campbell of Kansas had not "pocketed" it. As Chairman of the Committee on Rules Mr. Campbell was instructed to report a "rule" setting aside time for action on the proposed amendment, but failed to do so, with the result that the House, which was credited with being overwhelmingly in favor of the change, had no chance of expressing itself. Soon thereafter Mr. Campbell was defeated for renomination in Republican Party primaries and is now practicing law in Washington.

While the adoption of the proposed amendment would bring the legislative career of the Congressional lame duck to an abrupt close, no means have been devised to prevent him from serving in an important appointive position under the Government, except in so far as his nominations for office must be confirmed by the Senate, that body having the right under the Constitution to reject his name. Frequently the lame-duck nominee has been a Senator, and the "courtesy" of its members toward a former member operates, in that social club atmosphere, to bring confirmation.

After each biennial national election there is much talk of political lame ducks. Rumors fly thick and fast concerning their future. This one is reported to be slated for that public office, and that one for this public office. The quality of his politics furnishes no bar to preferment through appointment. If the lame duck be a defeated Democratic Senator, he is not barred from getting a public job at the hands of the Republican President with whom he may have been on friendly personal terms. Former Democratic Senators are serving the Government today. Federal commissions and boards, some of which must be bipartisan in their personnel in accordance with the laws creating them, furnish favorite berths for former Senators of the party not in power.

All Presidents have provided havens of refuge for political lame ducks. Mr. Coolidge has shown less of a tendency that way than some of his predecessors, but he has a lame-duck record. The most conspicuous instance where he appointed a defeated candidate for elective office to a position under the Executive Government was that of Frank B. Kellogg of Minnesota, the present Secretary of State.

Defeated Candidates in the Cabinet.

Mr. Kellogg served in the Senate from 1917 to 1923. In 1922 he was defeated for re-election by Henrik Shipstead, the only Farm-Labor Party representative now in the upper house. In December, 1923, President Coolidge appointed Mr. Kellogg Ambassador to the Court of St. James's to succeed Colonel George Harvey, and when Charles E. Hughes retired from the Coolidge Cabinet in 1925 Mr. Kellogg took his place.

It has not been unusual for Presidents to give the portfolio of Secretary of State to defeated candidates for the Presidency. There was the instance of President John Quincy Adams placing Henry Clay, his opponent in the elections of 1824, at the head of the Cabinet. More recent instances are the appointments of James G. Blaine, William J. Bryan and Charles E. Hughes by Presidents Benjamin Harrison, Wilson and Harding, respectively.

But while there have been exceptions, the tendency of Presidents is not to select for a Cabinet place any prominent party man whose electorate refused to return him to office. A conspicuous exception was the appointment of Harry S. New of Indiana as Postmaster General. President Harding brought him into the Cabinet after his own party, through the medium of the primary, had declined to nominate him for another term in the Senate. This case attracted considerable attention in view of Mr. New's rejection by the majority of his own party in the Hoosier State.

In these circumstances, bringing Mr. New into the Cabinet would do nothing apparently to strengthen the Republican Party with the nation's electorate, something that Presidents have in mind when making Cabinet choices. Every one in politics understood that President Harding was actuated by a feeling of personal affection for Mr. New in addition to confidence that the latter would conduct the affairs of the Post Office Department with ability. When President Coolidge succeeded Mr. Harding he continued Mr. New as Postmaster General, and the latter is now one of the five members of the Harding Cabinet who remain at the Coolidge council table.

Many of the lame ducks who fail of re-election to Senate or House return to their political habitats, most with the intention of qualifying for another try. Politics has a fascination that men who have experienced it find hard to resist. Others, however—and a goodly number—remain in Washington, whose atmosphere is a greater fascination to the lure of the political homeland.

With respect to Senators who serve a full term of six years in Washington or more than one term and Representatives who have had long service there and then met defeat at the polls, it is easy to understand why they prefer to remain at the capital. They find the environment conducive to content and happiness. They have formed friendships with others of their political ways of thought and to break their intimacies would mean discontent. The Senate, and to some extent the House, savors of the atmosphere of a social club, and with the "privilege of the floor" and the ability to continue delightful personal associations with one's own kind through frequent social functions it is difficult to go back to the old home town, where human contacts do not have the allurements of the nation's political centre.

Besides, their children grow up and are educated in Washington and form associations of their own that they desire to continue. These and other reasons frequently are responsible for the decision of the lame duck to remain at the seat of his former legislative activities, especially if he is not to do or has reached an age where he is satisfied to retire.

The Case of Senator Sawyer.

In most cases the defeated Senators and Representatives who have received appointments at the hands of the President get positions of importance, at least of dignity. But there are instances where they have accepted minor places under the Government. The most conspicuous instance of this character concerned Senator Frederick Adolphus Sawyer of South Carolina.

Senator Sawyer, a man of culture and refinement, was born in Massachusetts and graduated from Harvard in 1844. Going to Charleston, S. C., to be a normal school principal in 1850 and remaining as a teacher through most of the Civil War, he returned to Charleston in 1865, was appointed United States Collector of Internal Revenue and during the reconstruction period was elected Senator. When his term expired in 1873, he became Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, was indicted in connection with passing a fraudulent claim and ultimately was acquitted. Later he took a minor clerkship in the War Department. He died in Tennessee in 1891.

Scores of lame ducks are living in Washington practicing law or engaged in other non-official occupations. In recent years the tendency of those who are lawyers to remain in the capital after their usually enforced, but sometimes voluntary, retirement from Senate or House, has increased due to the lucrative practice provided by income tax statutes and by appearance before the many new commissions, boards and bureaus that deal with private business. Certain of them have become well-to-do through such occupations.

The proposed Constitutional Amendment as now before the House differs somewhat from the amendment in the form in which it passed the Senate. A report made to the House by the appropriate committee explains that the amendment is designed to have the newly elected President, Vice President and members of Congress take office approximately two months after their election; the "short session" of Congress will be abolished and Congressional elections will be held after the second session of Congress instead of between the first and second sessions, as at present. The report to the House proposes that the new Congress shall assemble on Jan. 4 and the Presidential and Vice Presidential terms shall begin on Jan. 20 following the general elections of the previous November.

It is clear, therefore, that the lame duck is an important factor in our political system. Any person or group of persons whose official disbarment, as far as Congressional activities are concerned, requires an amendment to the Federal Constitution must be looked upon as of outstanding consequence in the conduct of the Governmental affairs of the United States.

CYCLES OF WORLD TRADE CHARTED

THE alternate periods of good times and bad—the so-called business cycles—which disturb what might be the even tenor of economic development have now been shown to be approximately the same for all the leading nations of the world. Dr. Wesley C. Mitchell, Director of Research of the National Bureau of Economic Research and a leading authority on business cycles, has proved statistically at least, what he calls "a trend in the direction of a world economy in which all nations will prosper or suffer together." The results of Dr. Mitchell's studies have recently been published in Business Annals, which summarizes conditions in seventeen leading countries of the world for a period, in some instances, reaching back 136 years. The accompanying chart shows graphically how the waves of prosperity and depression tend to have the same rhythm throughout the world.

The chart covers seventeen countries for thirty-six years. It shows the existence of an international pattern in the business fortunes of different parts of the world. The white spaces representing prosperity and the black spaces representing depression are drawn from the records of each country. But when these charted records are placed one above the other, the white and black spaces form somewhat irregular vertical bands, showing the existence of a marked tendency for prosperity in one country to stimulate business in other countries with which the first has business dealings, and a similar tendency for depression to spread.

In detail the chart shows that of the seventeen countries included in the annals after 1890, ten had recessions in 1890-91, fifteen had recessions in 1900-01, fifteen in 1907-08, twelve in 1912-13, eleven in 1918 and fourteen in 1920. Further, the countries that escaped a share in these world reactions usually owed their exemption to still worse fortune. Thus South Africa and Japan had no recession in 1900-01 because they were already suffering from depression. The three countries of the seventeen which escaped in 1920 were Germany, Austria and Russia.

Dr. Mitchell emphasizes, however, that the experiences of the several countries were not identical in the years of crises and recessions. In the whole record no crisis was equally severe everywhere.

"For example," says Dr. Mitchell, "in 1873 the United States, Germany and Austria suffered far more severely than England and France. In 1890, on the contrary, the financial strain was more severe in London than in New York or Berlin, while Vienna deferred its recession until 1892. The centre of disturbance in 1900 seems to have been Germany; countries like the United States and Italy felt but repercussions of a foreign shock. In 1907 the gravest difficulties appeared in the United States. Probably the nearest approach to a severe world-wide crisis was made in 1920, and that case was obviously dominated by post-war readjustments."

FOREIGN TRADE SCOUTS SEEK A LEGAL STATUS

Government "Ambassadors of Business," Who Increased Exports by $33,000,000 Last Year, Are Still Unrecognized By Law—Senate Expected to Regularize Bureau

WASHINGTON.

LEGISLATIVE recognition of the foreign service of the Department of Commerce, which has existed in fact but without statutory basis for more than ten years, seems likely to be accomplished at last in the coming session of the Senate. The Hoch bill, "to establish in the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce a Foreign Commerce Service of the United States," passed the House by a substantial majority on April 13, was reported without amendment by the Senate Commerce Committee two weeks later, and since then has had a place on the Senate calendar.

The measure was due for consideration in the Senate in June, but went over at the request of Senator King, Democrat, of Utah. He is the only member of the upper house who openly opposes the bill. If it comes to a vote before March 4, there seems, at this time, no doubt that it will become a law.

Dr. Julius Klein, Director of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, has just emphasized in his annual report that "possibly the most urgent need of the bureau at the present time" is the enactment of this legislation. "It is vitally essential," he continues, "that the service should be given a firm foundation in law, a definite organization and clearly indicated salaries, functions and prerogatives, with requisite legal authority vested in the persons charged with its direction."

Tenure Insecure.

Senator King's opposition to the legalization of a foreign commerce service is based on his belief that its work is a duplication of efforts by the State Department's Consular Service. This objection was foreseen by the Senate committee, which recommended passage of the measure and quoted in its report this statement from the remarks of the House committee that sponsored the Hoch bill:

"Provisions suggested by the Department of State are included in order to prevent any conflict of authority at these foreign posts. Harmonious action by the various representatives of the United States abroad is sought and the avoidance of all duplication of effort in so far as possible in the interest of economy and efficiency."

Curiously enough, the foreign service of the Department of Commerce, whose members now go about their daily duties in some thirty-five foreign countries, apparently as secure in their stations as the members of the diplomatic corps, might suddenly be wiped out by the whim of a hostile appropriations committee. The nineteen commercial attachés, the forty trade commissioners and the still larger number of assistant trade commissioners and clerical employes would, in this event, find themselves out of work and obliged to pay their own expenses back to the United States.

Services Rendered.

With the growing importance of exporting in almost every branch of American industry the functions of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce in promoting foreign trade become more significant every year to the business men of this country. In the fiscal year 1922 a total of 905,000 individual trade-promotive services were rendered by the bureau. In the year just ended the figure was 2,052,000.

The specific types of service rendered by the Commerce Department's representatives abroad are familiar. Last year they included: In South Africa, the establishment of thirty-six local agencies for American goods, resulting in $406,000 worth of business during the year; in Spain, the releasing of $200,000 worth of automobiles held by Malaga customs officials; in Germany, the introduction through the efforts of the Berlin office of the bureau of American pea-cleaning and canning machinery; at Constantinople, the profitable disposal of a shipment of a Boston leather company, which had been refused by the consignees; in Chile, the calling of the attention of an American textile manufacturer to inefficiency on the part of his agent—a subsequent change resulting in the placing of $50,000 worth of orders; in Colombia, recommendation of measures which, when adopted, stamped out the practice of misbranding coffee exported to the United States, and so on.

Advertising for Trade.

The job of commercial attaché or trade commissioner is anything but a swivel-chair sinecure.

After the World War, for instance, Trade Commissioner Julian E. Gillespie was one of the first foreigners to reach Angora, after an extremely hazardous journey. During the last few years in China the commercial attaché at Peking and his staff have been going about their duties, traveling as well as they could from one part of the country to another while provincial military chieftains were at war. Trade Commissioner O. S. Watson, who has just returned for duty in the department after four years in Peking and Canton, has been several times within the effective range of bullets or bombs.

It has been Mr. Watson's job to go into an area that was burned and ravaged by raiding troops as soon as actual hostilities had ceased and learn from the survivors just what the replacement needs would be, so that American firms might be there first with their offers of new material and supplies. The Chinese, Watson says, have become so accustomed to disturbance that their daily business goes on in spite of it.

W. L. Schurz was serving as commercial attaché at Rio de Janeiro when called upon by Secretary of Commerce Hoover to investigate the possibilities of planting rubber in the upper Amazon River region, in what Schurz later described as the "diabolical paradise of the jungle." This assignment carried him more than 20,000 miles, on thirty-seven different rivers, covering more of the Amazon Valley than had ever before been traversed by any expedition of which a record was kept, and reached the foothills of the Andes. Schurz came out of the venture safely and Hoover got his report.

A Congressional appropriation back in 1905 brought into being the embryo of the present foreign commerce service. It contained an item of $30,000 for promoting foreign commerce by investigations abroad by agents of the Department of Commerce and Labor. Four men were sent overseas at that time by what was then called the Bureau of Manufactures, the forerunner of the present Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce. So satisfactory were their investigations to the industries whose interests were being served that appeals began to reach the department to extend its foreign activities.

And so from year to year Congress has continued to appropriate increasing amounts for this sort of promotion work. In 1914 a departure was established by provision, in another appropriation bill, for a corps of commercial attachés with diplomatic status, whose sole duties were to promote American trade in Europe, the Orient and Latin America. In the period 1914-16 the number of foreign offices maintained by the Commerce Department increased from ten to forty-two. Now there are 105 reporting officers—commercial attachés, trade commissioners and assistant trade commissioners—stationed throughout the world.

JULIUS KLEIN

Director of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce.

In the last year, the total expense of maintaining this foreign service was $1,120,665. Business that is definitely known to have accrued to American exporters as a result of the activities of the offices abroad was of a value of more than $33,000,000.

The Hoch bill proposes no innovation in the present regulations governing the service and does not require any additional appropriation. Duties of the officers of the corps are, generally speaking, similar for all grades. The commercial attachés, outranking trade commissioners and assistant trade commissioners, either are the heads of offices whose staffs include one or more of the lower grades, or are older men on the more responsible missions. Salaries range between $3,000 and $9,500, with only two or three receiving the highest figure and, on the other hand, a few assistant trade commissioners, in countries where the cost of living is low, receiving less than $3,000 a year.

Such is the prestige of the Commerce Department's service among business men that not a month passes without some of the bureau's staff being offered outside positions so attractive that they cannot afford to refuse. In no other branch of the Government is the turnover so high.

Comment on Accomplishment.

The high calibre of the men in this service results from the special and general qualifications required, and, besides, Herbert Hoover's executive and administrative capability dominates the bureau, as well as the rest of the department. Here is a foreign estimate of the service quoted from the German Industries and Handels-Zeitung:

The United States exported in 1925 goods valued at about $5,000,000,000. Compared with 1924, exports have increased about 13 per cent. What is it now that causes the curve of American exports to rise increasingly? First of all, the unparalleled industrial organization of the United States. * * The second cause is the systematic export organization of the United States, which has made American goods known in all countries, a condition that ten years ago no one would have expected. Even England, formerly dominant in the world market, is constantly falling behind, for example, in Latin America. * * *

"Before the war America began the organization of her export trade. The official organizations existing at the time of the war were of great service in the supply of raw materials. Since the war they have extraordinarily increased. Everywhere in great business centres, such as London, Paris, Berlin, Rome and Tokio, commercial attachés or trade commissioners are found at embassies and legations. These 'ambassadors of business,' as they are styled by the American press, report to the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce under the direction of Dr. Julius Klein."

Hoover's Appointments.

This invites attention to the second man in responsibility for the conduct of the service. Hoover worked characteristically when he selected the commercial economist, Dr. Klein, as Director of the bureau. Educated at two American universities, with additional studies in Europe and Latin America behind him, Dr. Klein left the Harvard Faculty in 1917 to become chief of the Commerce Department's Latin-American section. In 1919 he spent two years in the field, as commercial attaché at Buenos Aires, and was recalled in 1921 to take the post he now holds. Mention also should be made of J. Walter Drake, who resigned as President of one of the important automobile companies to become Assistant Secretary of Commerce. Although his authority extends to other bureaus of the ever-expanding Department of Commerce, Drake is directly concerned with the formulation of policies for Dr. Klein's bureau. Thoroughly imbued with the business viewpoint, Drake balances Klein, the economist, in steering the organization's course.

OLD DELAWARE TOLL BRIDGES ARE VANISHING ONE BY ONE

Boom Times, Begun With Motor Car Travel, End as Structures Are Made Free

THE toll bridges across the Delaware River are gradually fading out of the picture. Only a few are left of the dozens that once lined the historic stream which divides the States of Pennsylvania and New Jersey. The quaint covered bridges have gone with the covered wagon and other memories of American pioneer days.

Spring floods and ice jams have accounted for some, but most of them were taken over either by State or municipal authorities and made free bridges. All of the important structures where traffic is heaviest are now public bridges, with no tolls exacted from vehicles or pedestrians.

There is still an occasional ferry in the upper Delaware, the equipment consisting simply of an old flatboat, a long pole and one strong-armed operator; but these are one-man affairs conducted by a farmer or an old-time riverman of the neighborhood. Their capacity is one loaded automobile, or perhaps two small cars under favorable conditions, at a charge of thirty-five cents. Time, twenty minutes, if the current is not too strong.

Most of the old bridges, all of which were once owned by private companies, have been acquired by the Interstate Bridge Commission. All this has required several years of effort, negotiations for such bridges as the two States desire being now in the final stages.

The commission has recently acquired the last important span in the upper Delaware—the bridge connecting the town of Columbia, on the Jersey side, with Portland, Pa. This bridge will carry all the through traffic from the metropolitan district to the Delaware Water Gap, Pocono Mountains and Northeastern Pennsylvania. With one exception, it is the last of the covered bridges along the Delaware, the other being at Milford, thirty miles north of Trenton.

There are still three bridges operated by private companies, to which the Interstate Bridge Commission has paid little or no attention. They are on obscure routes—one at Belvidere, another at Milford and the third at Frenchtown. These will probably be made free bridges eventually, but the heavy traffic carriers are those which the commission has its eyes on at present.

The taking over of the old bridges was a sad blow to stockholders of toll companies. Organized in the old days to meet a public necessity, few of them ever paid handsomely. Five per cent. was about the best they could earn.

Then came the automobile and traffic was stimulated. The States began building good roads and, naturally, the fine concrete highways led right up to the approaches of toll bridges. Money showered into the stockholders' laps, more in a single year than in two decades before. The old bridge at Columbia, just acquired by the commission, last year turned in earnings of 70 per cent. and stockholders predicted 90 per cent. this year. Thousands of automobiles passed over the structure each week-end during the touring season, the charge per car each way being 25 cents.

SANTA FE UP IN ARMS AGAINST NEW 'CULTURE'

Citizens See Town's Personality Menaced by Federated Clubwomen's Plan to Make It a Mecca—Simple And Friendly Life Now the Rule

By WITTER BYNNER.

TIMES have changed. The Sabine women attack a walled city. The Federated Women's Clubs of the Southwestern States—selecting Santa Fé, N. M., as the spot where their studies and ideas may be most congenially pursued, where the city of the moment may be most happily built within a city of the years—have encountered a sudden belesagured opposition.

They find a population up in arms. Though the City Council offer these ladies land of doubtful ownership, though the Chamber of Commerce accord them a welcome of questionable validity, though certain authorities and individuals assure them that only "mud-hut nuts" (new artistic dwellers in old adobe houses) present any protest against the blessings of club made culture, the fact remains, in this our land where cities boost themselves, that Santa Fé faces the world once more as "the city different" by resisting with all the might and main of fully half its people the prospect of a considerable and eminently respectable addition to its human size.

Not only the Old Santa Fé Association, mainly of English-speaking residents, but also the Centro de Cultura and the Union Protectiva of Spanish-speaking residents, are out shoulder to shoulder, building a wall against the attack. And from Arkansas, Oklahoma, Missouri, Louisiana, Kansas, Colorado, Arizona and New Mexico itself the Sabine women, as if in Roman armor, march upon the City of the Holy Faith of St. Francis.

Woman's Gradual Emancipation.

Those who believe that in some way women must be relieved of the ignominy and resultant subterfuges of economic dependence have welcomed the successive changes through which this relief has seemed to be approaching. Some of those who object to the general standardization of American life have seen even in the conventional women's clubs a symptom of development necessary in the gradual emancipation of women. As long as men are immature enough to organize their Rotarian or Kiwanian groups for the promulgation of culture, women, it seems, must advance or mark time in the same way. One sex has to be approximately as foolish as the other. While male individuals lend themselves to collective banality, women individuals must keep pace; while the men have their lunches, their songs and their hours, the women must have their teas, their lectures and their minutes. It is all in the natural and amusing order of events.

Some, however, of the particular events due to the feminine course are not so amusing to Santa Fé. For years this little capital has existed as the centre of a few thousand lives. Apart from prehistoric activities it was first an imperialistic and religious centre for a few Spaniards; then it was a defensive centre for a few Indians; then a frontier centre for a few Americans. Later it became a business and political centre for a few more Americans; and now it has a town of threefold impulse, a centre for the descendants of Spanish imperialists, a centre for the ancestors of American imperialists and a centre for Americans tired of artificial values.

Through some financial feud long since, it was passed by as a railroad centre and has therefore continued as a town off the main line, quietly developing its threefold life. Its arid landscape and climate have been both a liability and an asset, through the discouragement of citizenship primarily interested in industry, commerce and agriculture and through the encouragement of citizenship primarily interested in health, happiness and the simple life.

Simplicity Reigns.

There is little in Santa Fé for the splurge of millionaires; it does not promote gorgeous estates and fortunes. The native residents, whose forefathers lived under the government of Mexico, are for the most part content with the modest livelihood and comfortable existence possible in such a town. The "Anglo" business men, who for one reason or another have chosen an unpromising location, have likewise for the most part taken on the simple spirit of the place and are willing to enjoy life, instead of merely preparing to enjoy it and never learning how.

All might have been well, but for the advent of artists, painters, writers and, alas, publicists. The charm of Santa Fé began to be known elsewhere, little by little, more and more, and finally too well. When persons are happy, particularly artistic persons, they cannot help saying so and saying why. And surely other persons, artists or not, cannot be blamed for wanting to be happy too. Santa Fé is distinctly different from any other town in the United States. Americans are mad over anything different; but a great part of their madness lies in enjoying the difference only until they can correct it. Underneath the happiness of these artists there must have been something of this Americanism, else why should they have advertised their refuge?

They might have known what would happen. And it has begun to happen.

Tourists have been increasing in Santa Fé. The very railroad that long ago snubbed the town has now decided to make use of it and apparently considers the artists quite as interesting to the outsider as any group of Indians in the adjacent pueblos. The artists have not wholly relished this progress. They have suspected that even the most distinguished and tactful commercialization of their chosen town by a powerful and wealthy organization may mean the withering of the charm that attracted them.

Toward invasion of this kind, however, there has been nothing for them to do, except to advise and guide the invaders in matters like architecture, interior decoration and the right way to exhibit Indians. Nowadays no American, not even an artist, seems to have any spirit left for combating gigantic corporations of men. The tank arrives and down we go.

Town No Longer Supine.

Now for another angle. Organizations of men are one thing; organizations of women are another. A great railroad can come into Santa Fé and make of it a circus town, without our esthetic athletes daring to whimper. But women. They have only been citizens for a few minutes. They have no real rights. When the clubwomen of nine States combine into a group and decide that they want Santa Fé as a Summer refuge, a place where they may study and play and breathe clean air, a "spiritual capital" to which they may add their own ideals of living and thinking—with so powerful an organization advancing, the artists and their fellow-citizens are no longer supine. They rally to the defense, they close the rusty gates.

Here is comedy. And yet it is more than comedy. For the first time in the later history of these United States (unless we except racial and economic outbreaks against the incursion of negroes) a substantial group of Americans rises in wrath against the advent of another group. On the face of it, such a position is untenable. Certain citizens have discovered and are enjoying in a certain town advantages which they are trying to prevent other citizens from arriving to enjoy.

Such protesters are arrogant, egotistic, presumptuous. They are self-important. They are comic. Of course they are. That is not the phenomenon. It is not that here are persons wishing to remain better off than their fellows. That goes everywhere. The phenomenon is a new one—different from that, different from anything that has happened in America.

Here are persons who, having learned the distinction between real and artificial values, are battling for the real. Here are persons who have found desert and sun, with only a few houses rising out of the earth-element and not disturbing it; here are persons who have found the sort of democracy forgotten in the rest of America, an almost total absence of caste, a relation of man to the sky rather than to the social register; here are persons who have found space more important than time, ease more important than vexation, the body more important than clothes, and evenness more important than events; here are persons aware of the simple reconciliation of God and Lucifer in a heaven not too remote; and here are persons who, knowing all these benefits, know also the fragility of such benefits in the presence of modern America.

Santa Fé is an oasis not only in the desert of New Mexico but also in the desert of the New World. There is water to be had for the spirit, but there is only a little water. Perhaps the wells may be dug deeper a year hence or ten years hence. Meantime, if too many travelers too suddenly arrive, the wells will be drunk dry and the people will be parched. The brackish water of pipes might be brought across from other States—the dwellings of other States, the caste of other States, the sense of time, the vexation, the clothes, the events, even a division again between God and Lucifer. But who wants it? Neither God wants it, nor Lucifer; neither the Catholic natives nor the pagan artists.

Ladies have always liked Lucifer—even Protestant ladies. The Santa Fé Chamber of Commerce may deceive itself into thinking that in the ladies' eyes turning toward the mountain-capital, this or that other attraction looms larger than do the attractions of Lucifer. Archaeologists in the Old Palace and the New Museum may devoutly believe that these feminine pilgrims are approaching relics and old bones. The ladies themselves know better. In the hearts that beat deeper than spades or clubs or diamonds, they anticipate Lucifer: Lucifer the cowboy, Lucifer the artist, Lucifer the Indian.

Many Sundays may intervene before the ladies of nine States ratify the predilection of a few stout leaders toward the Lucifer of Santa Fé, or toward the climate, or the old bones, or the mountain view, or the Chamber of Commerce, or whatever it may be. Many scruples may develop, or sensibilities, or kindly considerations, in many bosoms. Perhaps something deeper may develop, something to do with the good impulse on which women's clubs are built. The artists, who have waited to choose women for an adversary when they might have chosen a railroad, may be forgotten as artists, as egotistic defenders of sanctity, and be noted only as a comic flourish in a serious gesture: the gesture of a simple and happy population against being made any less simple and any less happy.

Acting for Themselves.

Women, through the ages and through devious lapses, have craved for themselves greater simplicity and greater happiness. Through social and political emancipation, Anglo-Saxon women have won for themselves an acknowledged right to think on their own account, in some respects, to act on their own account. There is little likelihood that, behind these ladies of the Southwest, fathers, husbands and brothers are ranged in solid phalanx to do the peace of Santa Fé. In this instance, surely, the ladies are thinking and acting for themselves.

Hence it is unlikely that, after conscientious deliberation, they would wish to deprive a little town of its personality, its individuality, its simplicity, its happiness.

True enough, the ladies thought of Santa Fé as a refuge, for the very same reasons that have attracted the instincts of artists and the intelligence of other persons already numbered among Santa Fé's 8,000 inhabitants.

They wish to live their own lives. Santa Fé wishes to live its own life. Great numbers of outsiders suddenly descending upon it, though with the best of intentions, can only coerce and destroy it.

A "Personal" Town.

Will the town, perhaps, protect itself by an injunction against an unapproved transfer of city land? Or will it be able to frighten the ladies away with its outcry?

At the present moment no one in Santa Fé seems to know the exact and final Sabine intention. Appearances indicate that the local Chamber of Commerce is more concerned than are the women themselves in having a modern cultural colony or "summer university" to belie the ancient shadows of the mountain called "The Blood of Christ." On the other hand, the Chamber of Commerce would seem to be misrepresenting its town, if one might judge by the size and the concerted elements of the opposition.

Resident artists and writers, like John Sloan, Mary Austin, Will Shuster, Alice Corbin, B. J. O. Nordfeldt, Andrew Dasburg and myself, and visiting artists, like Sinclair Lewis, Vachel Lindsay, Harriet Monroe and Willa Cather, are only a minor element of the agitation, in which natives, old-timers and new-comers of all sorts are a unit.

One of the floats in the vivid parade during the September Pasatiempo, Santa Fé's Mardi Gras, was called "The Culture Club of Keokuk," and it is noteworthy that, in this satire on a group of clubwomen held spellbound by a Swami, not one of the participants was an artist. Moreover, the best summary anyone in town has made of the town's dread of being boosted was made to me by one of the tradesmen on the Plaza.

"Santa Fé," said he, "is a personal town. I know everyone here and everyone knows me. We have time to chat over sales and purchases. We know one another's doings. We get more out of life than just a bank account. We have time to smile. Let this many women come in with their families every Summer, they'll have a different approach. They'll be exacting. They'll keep us hopping. Their interests won't be our interests. They'll develop on the part of us tradesmen a new and impersonal attitude, and in the long run that will have to be our attitude not only toward them but toward you. We won't be able to help ourselves. Santa Fé won't be a personal town any more."

To keep Santa Fé a personal town—that is why the defenders are out and the wall is rising, adobe by adobe.

WITTER BYNNER AND AN INDIAN

SALMON FROM SEA TO STOCK A LAKE

Maine Hatches 80,000 and Will Try to Cross Them With Fresh Water Variety for Size, Quantity and Gameness

A NOVEL experiment is being tried at Raymond, Me., at one of the State fish hatcheries. Last April 100,000 eggs from salt-water salmon were purchased from the Canadian Bureau of Fisheries, taken to the Maine station and hatched, and about 80,000 have lived. Already this salmon fry has grown to a length of from five to eight inches, a development about twice as fast as that from eggs taken from the native Sebago Lake fresh water salmon.

When the salmon are released in Sebago next Spring many of them will be nearly a foot in length if the present rate of growth is maintained. Up to this point the experiment has fully borne out the expectation of the man responsible for it. He is Frank W. Wardwell, Secretary-Treasurer of the Maine Fish and Game Association, a nature student and sportsman.

The station is on the Jordan River, which empties into Sebago, not more than a mile distant. In the late Fall the salmon run up this shallow stream to spawn.

One of the problems of the State fisheries officials is how to maintain the excellence of the salmon fishing in Sebago Lake. So far they have succeeded, but with the ever increasing numbers of fishermen, new methods that promise quick results are desired. Mr. Wardwell has for several years held to the belief that if the hardy North Atlantic sea salmon could be introduced into Sebago waters larger and stronger fishes would eventually result.

"We cross-breed dogs, horses, cattle," said Mr. Wardwell, "and produce super-animals. Why is it not reasonable to suppose that the same methods applied to salmon will succeed? I think it is generally conceded that in the beginning the salmon was a salt water fish. By running up the rivers and streams to spawn, by leaping dams and by stemming torrential passes as only sea salmon can, many of them got into our larger lakes and ponds and in various ways became landlocked.

"Half a century ago at the most there was a regularly operated canal between Sebago Lake and Portland Harbor. Sebago salmon, then, are only a few generations removed from their Atlantic ancestors. The lake fish run from two or three pounds to ten, twelve and a few a pound or two more in weight. The sea salmon attain a weight of twenty-five pounds. Moreover they are twice as hardy as the fresh-water stock and grow just about twice as fast.

"It seems to me that when 80,000 out of the original 100,000 eggs produce and attain a growth of [illegible] eight inches between April and November the experiment looks promising. These fishes will be released in the Spring and will be big enough to look after themselves. Three years from now if all goes well the majority of them will be of fine game size and Sebago Lake fishermen will benefit.

"This cross-breeding of the [illegible] sea salmon with the fresh-water [illegible] will, I expect, produce salmon fishing in Sebago not equaled anywhere else in Maine, either as to size or number of catch. Incidentally, I will add gameness. Today a seven or eight pound Sebago salmon will furnish pretty snappy entertainment. But a few years from now, after the young tribe has consorted with their cousins from the ocean, where only the fit survive, a strike will mean something worth remembering."

Dr. William C. Kendall of Fryeburg, one of the scientists of the United States Bureau of Fisheries, on the other hand, predicts that the experiment will be of "doubtful value."

"Far better," he says, "to expend our efforts on our landlocked variety than to try and convert a salt-water salmon into a fresh-water one."

Dr. Kendall scouts the idea that there will be any great benefit from the experiment, pointing out that while there may be larger growth in the earlier stages of the sea salmon life its future development may be retarded when it fails to reach salt water.

New York as well as Maine has its landlocked variety called Sebago salmon, and so salmon fishermen generally will be keenly interested in the outcome. For if it is successful in Sebago Lake it should be equally successful in other waters where there is need of improving the salmon fishing.

WILDE MS. IS A MYSTERY

By WALTER LITTLEFIELD.

THE trial that began in the King's Bench Division, London, on Nov. 9 and was then suddenly adjourned, is expected eventually to settle a question that has been agitating the bibliophile world for over a year: Is the played entitled "For Love of the King" a forgery? It was published as the work of Oscar Wilde by Hutchinson's Magazine in October, 1921; by the Century Magazine in December of that year and by Methuen & Co. in book form in October, 1922.

A forgery it is asserted to be by a London bookseller and author, Christopher Sclater Millard, who writes under the pen name Stuart Mason, and the means he took to get his assertion before the public prompted Methuen & Co. to bring suit for libel, alleging that ever since the book appeared Mr. Millard has charged that they had knowingly offered for sale and had continued to sell as a genuine work by Wilde a work they knew to be not his.

The suit is not a surprise. Mr. Millard has repeatedly told his friends that he was making every effort to get into court in the hope that he might prove "For Love of the King" a forgery, and that evidence submitted might reveal the presence of a gang of forgers that for some time had been preying upon collectors.

The manuscript from which the book is printed was obtained by the publishers from a Mrs. Chan Toon, who claimed intimate association with the Wilde family. On the death of her husband, who was barrister of the Middle Temple, she became Mrs. Woodhouse Pearse. She said that she had in her possession letters from the late Robert Ross, literary executor of Oscar Wilde, begging her to allow him to publish the play in his edition of Wilde's complete works. This request she had refused. After Ross's death, however, she says she relented and brought the manuscript to the Methuens, with a letter said to have been received from the author, along with his manuscript. This letter, which is used as an introduction to the book, Mr. Millard declares Wilde never wrote. It is dated Nov. 27, 1894, and bears the address Tite Street, Chelsea. Beginning "My dear Mrs. Chan Toon," the document reads in part as follows:

I am sending you a fairy play entitled "For Love of the King" just for your own amusement. It is the outcome of a long and luminous talk with your distinguished husband in the Temple and on the river in the days when I was meditating writing a novel as beautiful and as intricate as a Persian praying rug. I hope I have caught the atmosphere. I should like to see it acted in your garden house on some night when the sky is a sheet of violet and the stars like women's eyes.

It seems that Mr. Millard was drawn into the affair through an accident. In the Summer of 1925 Mrs. Woodhouse Pearse, having, so she said, six letters from Oscar Wilde, of which she wished to dispose, called on a London dealer, who directed her to certain collectors. He gave her their names and addresses. Through either his mistake or her own, instead of calling upon J. Millard, Esq., The Bungalow, Abbey Road, St. John's Wood, N. W., she found herself communicating with Christopher Sclater Millard, The Bungalow, 8 Abercorn Place, N. W. 8. A well-known manuscript expert, he had written an authoritative bibliography of Oscar Wilde some years before.

His Suspicions Aroused.

Mr. Millard told a friend, the French writer and collecter Henry D. Davray, that after his interview with Mrs. Woodhouse Pearse he became convinced that she was the dispenser, possibly the fabricator, of several Wilde forgeries recently purchased by dealers and collectors. Suspecting that "For Love of the King" belonged in the same category, he laid his suspicions before the Methuens, requesting that they allow him to examine the manuscript of the play. It was not asserted that this manuscript itself is in Wilde's handwriting, but the corrections were said to have been made by him. Mr. Millard declares they were not. No one among Wilde's friends has ever heard of the play. There is no reference to it in any of his books, journals or letters. It is not mentioned among the literary remains of Ross, nor had Ross's collaborator ever heard of it. Moreover, Mr. Millard discovered that just at the time Wilde was alleged to have written "For Love of the King" solely for Mrs. Chan Toon's amusement he was being overwhelmed with offers for plays from managers and was declining them every day.

Firmly believing that Wilde was not the author of the play and failing to obtain from the publishers an admission of that fact, he wrote first to The London Times, then to The Times Literary Supplement. Finally he wrote to The Daily Graphic. These papers declined to publish his letters on the subject. Next he wrote to Walter Hutchinson, the editor of the magazine bearing that name, and enclosed a copy of his letter to the former Mrs. Chan Toon. It was found that she had disappeared.

The Poster Accusation.

Then he placed on sale a pamphlet entitled "Who Wrote 'For Love of the King'?" This pamphlet contained his correspondence with editors. To all booksellers posters making the same charges were sent. It is the wording of one of these posters that finally caused the Methuens to bring the suit for libel. The objectionable passage reads:

With the assistance of Mrs. Pearse this eminently respectable firm of publishers has succeeded in foisting on an unsuspecting public 1,000 copies of a book at 8s 6d which but for Wilde's name and imprint of the firm no one would have paid 8½d for.

Only two witnesses were examined before the case was adjourned. George Ernest Webster, formerly managing director of the firm of Methuen & Co., said he did not know Mrs. Pearse until she came to their office to sell them the play. "She was rather eccentric and had a parrot on her shoulder," he said. "We submitted the play to E. V. Lucas, an authority on Wilde, and he reported that he believed it was genuine. There was never a suggestion that it was not." Mr. Lucas, now Chairman of Methuen & Co., was the second witness. He testified that he was asked to read the play and that he did not even now doubt its genuineness.

Mr. Merriman, K. C., who opened the case for the plaintiffs, gave due credit to the defendant as a Wilde expert, saying that at one time Mr. Millard had been well acquainted with Wilde, and since Wilde's death had been "regarded as an authority upon his works." He added that his campaign, now indulged in for over a year, to attempt to prove "For Love of the King" a forgery was an obsession and the charge quite incapable of proof. It had, he said, come about in this way:

"It appears that Mrs. Pearse had tried to sell him six letters alleged to be by Wilde, and he at once became convinced that they were forgeries. By a similar process of reasoning he became convinced that if these letters were forgeries Mrs. Pearse had forged the play."

Mrs. Chan Toon, or Mrs. Woodhouse Pearse, was recently discovered in prison, where she is serving a sentence for theft.

CHEMISTRY FURNISHES CLUES TO DETECTIVES

The Laboratory Plays a Large Part in Modern Crime Detection—Microscopic Analysis Provides Often Uncannily Accurate Means for Fixing Crime

THE accompanying article is the third of a series of four dealing with modern crime detection. The first article showed how scientific knowledge must be part of the detective's equipment, the second discussed the new methods of detecting forgery. The fourth article will be published in an early issue.

By EDWARD H. SMITH.

MODERN detective art concerns itself more and more with positive, physical, material means of reinforcing the judgments of the mind. Psychological experiments, more than anything else, have taught us how fallible is our reason, how vagarious are our processes, how tricky are our brains. Consequently, we ask surer evidence of guilt or innocence and we rely naturally upon physics, chemistry and other more or less exact sciences to provide it.

Accordingly, the laboratory has come to play a great part in crime detection. Tomorrow it will play a greater. Experiments and researches in physics and chemistry are constantly being made in the interest of justice, and the whole accumulation of the world's positive knowledge is being made to serve the investigator, the jury and the judge.

One of the ancient ambitions of justice is reliable self-accusation, self-conviction; for what could be simpler or more unquestionable than to get the guilty man to denounce himself and prove his own offense? In more primitive times realization of this end was attempted by means of torture, and this is still a method far more widely and cruelly employed than our police authorities can ever be made to admit. Today, however, such practices are frowned upon by the public and even the law refuses them any standing.

Gone "Third Degree."

About twenty years ago, Professor Hugo Münsterberg made experiments with a mechanism which he called a chronoscope, soon dubbed a "lie detector" by the popular press. As a pioneer in psychological experimentation, Münsterberg knew the laws governing the association of ideas in the brain—one of the bases of present day mentality tests. He proceeded by means of a fairly simple electrical machine which recorded the length of time between the uttering of a word by the inquisitor and the reply by the suspect.

A hundred words were placed in a list, among them a number suggestive of the alleged crime. A record was then kept of the interval between the last word and the spoken associated word. If it was found that a questioned suspect responded in one second to ordinary words, making the association quickly, but required two, three or even four seconds to respond to the dangerous words, it was deemed clear that the accused was guilty and lying.

Münsterberg's Sphygmometer.

Professor Münsterberg also experimented with another truth-detecting apparatus which recorded the variations in the heart action and blood pressure when a suspect was asked embarrassing or exciting questions—the much discussed sphygmometer.

Münsterberg's earlier method, now generally called the word reaction test, has in recent years been extensively used by the police—more in Europe, however, than in this country. The results—where a skilled tester has done the work, a man of fine discrimination and broad experience—have been uniformly good.

Hitherto, the sphygmometer has given way to an elaborated or adapted mechanism based on the same facts and ideas. Burtt & Marston, the Münsterberg's successors in the psychological laboratory at Harvard, have been experimenting with various mechanisms for recording changes in blood circulation and the breathing. The principal instruments used by these investigators are two. The first is an elaboration of the blood-pressure meter, by means of which they record on a drum of smoked paper, operating in connection with a timing device, all changes in blood pressure, the quality and quantity of the circulation, changes in heartbeat, &c. The point here is that an accused person, if guilty, becomes inwardly excited, the glands functioning too freely and causing a rising systolic pressure, which can be recorded. Schlapp, at Post-Graduate Medical School, New York, has applied this principle to his examinations of delinquent children and others for many years.

The second instrument is a similar mechanism for recording changes in the quantity, quality and rapidity of the breathing while a suspect is being questioned. Similarly, the excited glands cause respirational changes and irregularities when a guilty man becomes alarmed at the mention of certain words or the uttering of accusations.

Needless to say, both methods must be rigidly controlled and most guardedly used. Any but experts would get, to be sure, the most appallingly false results.

In the last few years, Dr. E. House, an obscure physician of Ferris, Texas, has been much noticed because of his unfortunately misnamed "truth serum." Such an absurd description of the familiar drug, hyoscine or scopolamine, plus a thorough misconception of the good doctor's claims and ends, brought down on him much caustic and ribald criticism. The fact, however, seems to be that the physician's claims are very moderate and his experiments reveal that he has come upon something that is, to say the least, worthy of exhaustive trial and experiment.

How "Truth Serum" Works.

Dr. House takes a subject and injects 1-130th of a grain of hyoscine. After twenty minutes he repeats the injection, adding 1-30th of a grain of apomorphine. After another twenty minutes he injects 1-20th of a grain of hyoscine and twenty minutes later produces complete unconsciousness by means of chloroform. By this method he produces what he describes as a mental state midway between amnesia and hypalgesia, which he calls "House's Receptive Stage." In this condition, says the experimenter, the subject can hear and answer, but has lost all control of inhibitions and necessarily tells the truth.

Dr. House has made a number of controlled demonstrations, the results of which are highly suggestive, even if not conclusive. Most of the criticism leveled at him has been based on the idea that he intends the statements thus extracted from prisoners to be used in court. Perhaps he had such hopes in the beginning, but he now offers his hyoscine method merely as a substitute for the third degree. By means of it, he gets information to be enlarged on and checked up by investigators. In other words, he achieves no more than the starting point, the clue. Sometimes, to be sure, the subject, confronted with what has been taken from him under the anesthetic, will make a conscious confession.

The work of the chemist in connection with crime detection began with the prosecution of poisoners. In a previous article I pointed out the strides analysis has been forced to make to keep up with the scientific killer. Not many decades ago the poisons employed were few and simple. Their detection was easy enough, or so it seems from the present viewpoint. Yet how handicapped were detective science and the law may be read from a recent happening in France.

Celebrated Poison Case.

In 1878, Danval, a Paris chemist, was convicted of having poisoned his wife with arsenic. He was sent to the Cayenne penal colony and remained there thirty years, being finally released because of persistent doubts of his guilt. He had been free for fifteen years, living in disgrace but constantly protesting his innocence, when the authorities finally consented to a review of his case.

It was immediately found that he had been condemned on the finding of a small fraction of a grain of the metallic poison in the dead woman's body. Scientists of those days did not know that such small quantities of arsenic are normally present in the human body. Those who caused Danval's conviction evidently failed to say that the minimum lethal dose is at least two grains. He was exonerated and compensated.

One of the pet themes of the fictioneer is an undiscoverable poison, one unknown to chemists and defying analysis or detection. But this conceit belongs to romance. All poisons leave their traces, either through residue in the internal organs that can be identified by means of almost unbelievably subtle tests or through characteristic symptoms in the afflicted and recognizable effects on various cells and tissues.

Chemistry has, however, greatly widened its usefulness to the detective in more recent years. We all know of the older cases in which stains were analyzed and found to have been blood or acid or drugs. We know of scores of other legal activities of the chemist. Today the chemist takes part much earlier in the history of a criminal investigation. A floater is taken from the river. The question of the point of immersion is important. Water from the trachea and bronchia is analyzed for diatoms, mud, flora and fauna peculiar to certain regions.

Dust from floors where a crime has been committed often will give the chemist important clues to the identity of persons who were present or to drugs used in a poisoning case.

Some authentic exploits of the analytical chemist may be worth remembering. In a recent California case the criminal dressed his slain victim in his own clothes and ornaments and tried to cremate the body, at the same time disappearing and giving the impression that a suicide had occurred. It was found that a prosperous rancher had disappeared at the same time and an innkeeper recalled having seen the rancher and the supposed dead man dining at his place some hours before the end. The body was charred beyond recognition, but a chemical analysis of the stomach revealed partly digested sardines—which the rancher had ordered at the inn. The murderer was soon traced, arrested and convicted.

In the Bronx, two years ago, after a peculiar investigation, the body of a woman was exhumed from a shallow grave in the rear of a garage. Advanced decomposition had set in, so that all ordinary methods of investigation were negatived. Indeed, almost nothing survived that was recognizable except a cheap purse of a kind in such common use that it must have been impossible to prove the corpus delicti thereby. Suspicion pointed to a man who was known to have been philandering and whose wife was missing. A woman neighbor told of eating lunch with the absent woman just before she disappeared. The stomach of the corpse was sent to Alexander O. Gettler, chief chemist of the medical examiner. Mr. Gettler quickly found grape seeds and other remainders of food which formed the basis of an identification upon which the husband was convicted and subsequently sent to the chair.

Microscopic Methods of Gross.

A similar case in Vienna is reported by Gross.

He tells the story of a man who was taken prisoner on the Russian front by Austrians in the late war. He was dressed in the German uniform, faultlessly down to the smallest detail, and he spoke not a scholastic German but a dialect of the district—which fact argued in his favor. However, he was suspected. The scrapings from under his finger nails, from his shoes and from his clothing were submitted to microscopists, who had the assistance of chemists.

A few days later the prisoner was called before the commanding officer and confronted with the facts. The German chief told him that he was a spy; that he was a Russian officer of the Division X; that he had killed Private R. H., of the German outposts; that he had been hiding among Russian peasants, who had supplied him with bread; that he had passed through the forest of R.; that he had ridden on two horses, one a young bay and the other an old gray; that he had crossed Stream A at Point B and had entered the lines at a certain time. With this astounding information went the curt sentence: "Death at sunrise."

The findings had been based, in the order of their mention above, on the following:

Traces of cloth fibre in the scrapings, of the color and kind used in the uniforms of Russian officers of the Division X; rye pea and lentil starches, dextrinized by baking, such bread being peculiar to the Russian peasants; cells from hazel and other brush and from oak and soil algae peculiar to the forest of R.; skin cells and red or partly disintegrated blood corpuscles, showing that human blood had been upon the hands (an easy connection with the outpost, the only man recently killed in the neighborhood); desmids, diatoms and algae peculiar to the Stream A at Point B; hair of a bay horse not more than four years old and of a gray horse more than ten; the state of dryness of mud on the boots, the mud being peculiar to a road lying along the front lines.

Disciples of New School.

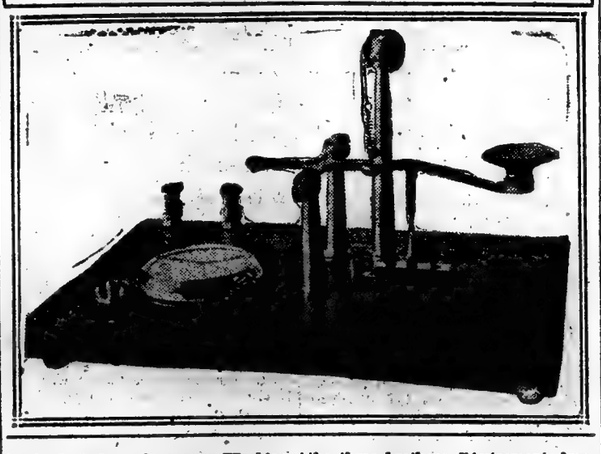
The Gross School has a number of followers in this country, among whom may be mentioned Dr. Charles E. M. Fischer of Chicago, E. O. Heinrichs of San Francisco, lecturer on criminal subjects at the University of California, and Dr. Albert Schneider, also of San Francisco.

Mr. Heinrichs did an interesting piece of work in connection with the hold-up of a Southern Pacific express train in the course of which three of the crew were killed. Using a pair of abandoned overalls, some burlap sacks that had been wrapped about the shoes of one of the bandits, and other apparently fruitless clues, Mr. Heinrichs concluded that one of the criminals was a left-handed, brown-haired lumberjack from Oregon or Washington or Oregon, of fastidious personal habits and probably clean-shaven.

Smears of pitch and grease about the left-hand buttonhole of the overalls and small chips and needles from the Douglas fir in the right-hand overalls pocket led to the conclusion of left-handedness and the occupation of woodsman. The hair color was determined from a hair caught in a button and other hairs clinging to the cloth. Microscopic examination showed this to be the hair of a young male. The size and weight of the man were suggested by his overalls and his fastidiousness by some very fine nail cuttings and filings in the pockets. With this to go on, the detectives ran down the three brothers d'Autremont, lumberjacks from the fir country. D'Autremont père was a village barber and one of his sons—he of the abandoned overalls—had assisted him in the shop when not felling trees. Here he had acquired the habit of manicuring his nails.

In this field again there are various false claims and exaggerations. The truth is that the microscope and the chemist's retort have made it possible to glean evidence from minutiae of matter such as were formerly quite neglected. But there are limits, and there is nothing miraculous or baffling about the business—just another insight of sober science.

DEVICE USED IN AIR-GAP TEST



BERLINER PROVES AIR-GAP THEORY

Layer of Air That Makes Possible Voice Transmission in Radio and in Telephony Is Photographed

THE air gap which makes possible voice transmission over the telephone transmitter or the radio microphone has recently been photographed. When Emile Berliner discovered that a metal ball resting lightly against a metal point sticking out through the centre of a drum would at the point of contact between the two throw an electric current into vibration corresponding to voice vibration, he made possible the radio microphone and the telephone transmitter of today. He called the contact between the ball and the metal point the "loose contact," and it is still so known.

Soon after he made that discovery Mr. Berliner reasoned that there was between the ball and the metal point a conducting layer of air which picked up the vibrations transmitted to the ball and passed them along to the drum, although the layer of air was not visible. During the process of passing the electric current over the loose contact it was transformed into vibrations because the layer of air continuously changed its width and its conductivity, in that manner becoming a delicate mechanical transformer of the electrical current.

Mr. Berliner held to his belief in the existence of an air gap. Many years ago he had put a Blake transmitter contact into an air-tight chamber and pumped out the air. He found that the electrical resistance through the contact was reduced when the air was exhausted from the air was again admitted.

Nearly fifty years after his discovery of the principles of loose contact Mr. Berliner has now been enabled to photograph what happens at the loose contact when any one talks over the microphone—showing clearly the layer of air between the two points of the loose contact.

This is the way he went about solving the puzzle. He rigged up a Morse telegraph key, the contacts consisting of elongated conical iron pins, and mounted the key upon a small block of wood. The attachment of a tiny relay spring to the key enabled him to adjust the contact between the ends of the pins. Two binding posts on the block connected the key to an induction coil, through which the current passed on to an ordinary telephone receiver. Then he placed a watch on the block of wood near the key.

The key could be so delicately adjusted that the vibrations caused by the ticking of the watch, as well as the whirring of its wheels, would be transmitted through the wood, up one pin of the key, across the loose contact or gap at the points, and along the other pin and out at the binding posts to the induction coil and then through the telephone receiver to the ear.

When he had the little apparatus working to his satisfaction he enlisted the aid of Roy M. Allen of Bloomfield, N. J., formerly the President of the New York Microscopic Society, in attempting to take photographs of what happened at the loose contact while Mr. Berliner listened through the telephone receiver to the ticking of the watch placed near the Morse key. The microscope which magnified the gap 540 diameters showed very clearly the existence of the layer of air which Mr. Berliner had asserted nearly fifty years ago was present.

How the Idea Came.

It is interesting that the idea of a microphone came to Mr. Berliner through a Morse key which he operated before an employe of the Washington Fire Alarm Office. The electrician noticed that Mr. Berliner dropped the key in sending a message instead of pressing it down. "Hold on," said the electrician, "you must press the key. Otherwise the key contact will not pass the whole strength of the current. A loose contact offers a resistance." This led Berliner to the idea of using a loose contact for the transmission of speech.

"I suppose it might be possible to get a moving picture of the vibrations traveling through the layer of air," says Mr. Berliner, "but such an attempt would be fraught with tremendous difficulties."

SEAMEN GRATEFUL FOR BOOKS TO READ ON LONG VOYAGES

LETTERS of appreciation from the crews and officers of the American merchant marine and of the United States Coast Guard are daily reaching the American Merchant Marine Library Association, which maintains a library for their free use.

The association was incorporated in 1921 to continue and develop the library service for the men of the merchant marine which was started during the war by the American Library Association. With Mrs. Henry Howard as President, the work of the association broadened to include the United States Coast Guard and a number of lighthouses.

Four hundred of the ships receiving libraries are Great Lakes vessels. The others sail from Atlantic, Gulf and Pacific ports to every country in the world. Probably in circulation and certainly in mileage, this public library of the high seas ranks first as a traveling library.

The steamship Chantier, the ship of the Byrd Arctic Expedition, was equipped with reading material by the association. In a letter signed by nine of the members of the expedition the entire crew expresses gratitude.

"During those cold and bleak nights the books which you furnished us were a source of much comfort. It was acts of consideration such as yours that made our arduous tasks seem light," they wrote.

Another letter signed by the officers and crew of a merchant ship says:

"The books are eagerly looked forward to and are in constant use. Many men are using the textbooks in correspondence courses. How often the seamen of foreign ships have expressed their surprise at the fine books placed on board our vessels, and stated that they have to rely on their slender purses for reading matter. Old magazines are eagerly looked forward to, the dates of publication being immaterial. May your unselfish work prosper."

LUINI'S PAINTING RECALLS ROMANCE

Newly Found Work of an Old Master Is the Portrait of a Beautiful Woman Who Was Beheaded

EVERY now and then out of some dusty antique shop or still dustier attic there emerges a picture which is the work of one of the masters of an older time. Such a portrait, it is declared, is that of the beautiful Countess of Cellant from the brush of Bernardino Luini.

This magnificent picture was not discovered in an antique shop in Bergamo, as at first reported, but in London, by Gino Longhi del Vitalba, and was brought to Italy after complying with all the English and Italian customs regulations. Mauro Pelliccioli of the Brera Academy in Milan was also interested in bringing the portrait back, and it was to him that it was given for cleaning and restoring.

In the process of cleaning Signor Pelliccioli became convinced of the worth of the picture and pronounced it a masterpiece. Signor Longhi immediately called in the best experts available, among whom were Senator Adolfo Venturi of Rome, Dr. Suida of Vienna, Dr. Hoesy of Budapest, Professor Vizzi of Genoa, Achille Locatelli Milesi and Mauro Pelliccioli. From the opinions rendered by these experts the picture was pronounced to be the work of Bernardino Luini and dated between 1520 and 1525. The authenticity of the portrait seems, therefore, to have been established.

This portrait, which now hangs in the Longhi Villa in Bergamo, shows a beautiful woman in the nude reclining on a lily studded meadow at the edge of a dense forest. The body lies on the left side with the torso supported on the left elbow. The right hand draws a light veil over her, while an end of the same veil is held in the left hand. The figure is that of a woman of the "northern type" with broad shoulders and strong, well-formed body. The face is not particularly beautiful, but is strong in a masculine way and crowned by a mass of dark hair combed and tied back in the style of the fifteenth century, exposing the ear. On the left in the background is a lake and landscape believed to represent a scene from Lago Maggiore of which Luini was very fond. The details of the background are vivacious and relieve the rather monotonous tone of the whole. The wooden panel is unusually large, being about 1.35 meters in length by 1.09 high.

The Countess and the Painter.

Romance and mystery lie behind the life stories of both the subject of the sixteenth century portrait and its painter, which call to memory a generation in which the knife of the assassin and the brush of the master painter were wielded, apparently, with identical skill. The Countess of Cellant was beheaded for causing the death of an admirer almost openly, and yet authorities place her as the model of St. Catherine in Luini's great fresco in the Besozzi Chapel at Milan—in fact, the newly found portrait is believed to confirm this statement.

Of Luini, whose pictures were so glorious that many of them for years were thought to be the work of Leonardo da Vinci, very little is known. He painted masterpieces of fresco and oil in his day and then at the height of his power all trace of him vanished. Even the dates of his birth and his death are unknown despite the earnest efforts of many investigators to establish them.

A full three centuries had passed between the last painting of Luini and the day when his genius was acclaimed to the world by John Ruskin "The Raphael of Lombardy" Luini has been called, and yet it is the most difficult of tasks to piece the broken fragments of his story into a connected whole. Vasari, the chronicler of so many of the earlier masters, gives only passing mention to this genius of Milan. He was born, as far as it can be determined, some time between 1465-1475 at Luino on the sunny shores of Lake Maggiore and, as was the custom of the time, took his name from his native town. Even today there is pointed out to the traveler a house cresting a steep slope which is reputed to be the birthplace of Luini.

While practically all of his masterpieces have found a home in private collections and the great art galleries of Europe or remain still on the walls of the churches where they were painted, one at least has reached America. Only ten years ago Luini's "Madonna Enthroned" was brought to this city and was purchased by the Brooklyn Museum for $33,500. Applause from the audience in the auction room greeted the news that it was to stay here.

Ever since Ruskin made his discovery of the neglected artist, other writers have been searching indefatigably for further information on the life tale of Luini. The eminent Vasari gives his name as Bernardino del Lupino and says he "was an exceedingly delicate and pleasing painter as may be seen by many works of his, a number of which are in the City of Milan.

Poet and Great Painter.

At Saronnio, about twelve miles from there, is a "Marriage of Our Lad" by this master, which is admirably executed, as are also certain of his pictures in the Church of Santa Maria, which are most perfectly painted in fresco. Bernardino worked extremely well with oils also. He was a most obliging person, friendly and liberal in all his actions. To him therefore is deservedly due all the praise which belongs by right to those artists who do themselves no less honor by the courtesy of their manners and the excellence of their lives than by the distinction to which they attain in their art."

The mystery surrounding Luini becomes deeper when one explores the writings of Lomazzo, another early critic, who refers to Luini as a poet as well as an artist. No poems by Luini have ever been found. Morigia recalls a treatise on painting which remains lost in the centuries. In such little-known spots as Saronno, Legnano, Como, Lugano, Ponte and Monza, Luini toiled at his greatest work, and the world passed him by for more than 300 years.

Here and there amid ancient writings there comes to light a fragment of his career which shows that it had its storms as well as its calms. Very few persons were able to live a life of complete peace in the turbulent Italy of that era. The presence of his magnificent frescoes on the walls of the church at Saronno are not without a sinister background, according to report. Luini, it is told, while at the peak of his talent in 1525, was forced to flee from Milan on account of having killed a man in self-defense. The loss of Milan, it is certain, was the gain of the pilgrimage church in Saronno, to which he fled for sanctuary.

In order to repay the church for its protection Luini set up his scaffolds, took his brushes and went to work on a series of glorious frescoes. His food, a modicum of wine and a money payment, amounting to 30 cents a day, was all the reimbursement which his genius received. Yet, lost in the glamour of his art, he was content and when he left insisted on painting a picture of "The Nativity" on the wall of the cloister.

"It is almost a pity," said the monks, according to the legend, "that Luini did not kill more men so that we might have received more gifts of the same kind from him."

Leaving the chestnut and olive groves of Lake Maggiore, Luini, already an accomplished artist, arrived at Milan just after the celebrated Leonardo da Vinci had departed. It was, of course, impossible for any artist in Milan to escape completely from the influence of the great master and it is not strange that many a Luini exhibits a similar style. These portraits, however, were of such surpassing excellence that it required the passing of generations before they became accredited to him, rather than to da Vinci. It is something to follow in the footsteps of a master with such skill as to have one's own compositions taken for his. Writers contemporary with Luini declare that he was never a pupil of da Vinci, but studied under Stefano Scotto of Milan.

It was while in this city, the story runs, that another accident befell him, the forerunner of the romance of his life. The parish priest, anxious to watch the progress of his work at close hand, mounted to Luini's scaffold in the Church of San Giorgia al Palazzo and, due to a misstep, fell and was killed. Excitement ran high through the streets of the city, and so grave were the threats made against the painter that he sought refuge in flight.

In his later escape from difficulty Luini sought the sanctuary of the church, but this time he hastened to throw himself on the protection of the noble family of Peluccs, in Monza. Those were the days when a powerful family was able to stand as a bulwark between a fugitive and his pursuers. The Peluccs gave shelter to Luini, and for two years he repaid them for their aid by decorating the walls of the Casa Pelucca with magnificent frescoes from the Old Testament and compositions on mythological subjects.

Luini and Laura Pelucca.

There was another reason for his protracted stay in the Casa Pelucca—the beautiful Laura, the daughter of the house. The love of the artist was returned by the noble heiress, much to the distaste of the family. Suitors for their daughter's hand were many, and a penniless genius as a son-in-law was far from acceptable. Affairs reached a climax when two of Laura's suitors engaged in a tournament for her hand and so much bad blood was aroused by the fact that one of them later murdered the other. As Laura remained firm in her decision to keep her troth with Luini, her parents sent her to a convent in Lugano.

BERNARDINO LUINI

Here years later, when he was engaged on his tremendous "Crucifixion"—one of the largest frescoes ever executed by the artist, and covering the entire wall separating the nave of the church from the choir—Luini met his Laura once more, but at this point the record ends, and here also is found the last trace of Luini, an entry on the convent books in 1533 of a payment to him of 50 lire. After that date all is silence on the artist of mystery.

It was in Milan that the Countess of Cellant was beheaded in 1528 for bringing about the death of one of her lovers. Tempestuous, unscrupulous and beautiful, she had married into the Visconti family, and after the death of her first husband became the wife of the Count of Cellant. After a quarrel they parted, and the Countess went her own unbridled way, followed by a host of admirers.

Her fashion of getting rid of an admirer of whom she wearied was simple. Ardizzio, Count of Mavino and Sanseverino, Count of Galasso, were intense rivals for her favors. When the Countess desired to remove Ardizzio from the scene she played upon the jealousy of a Sicilian youth who was madly in love with her, with the result that Ardizzio received the knife of the assassin in his back.

Unfortunately, the Countess had previously tried to persuade Ardizzio to murder Sanseverino and at another time had endeavored to have Sanseverino put Ardizzio out of the way and the two rivals had compared notes. No sooner had Ardizzio been slain before Sanseverino came forward with his information and the Countess was seized. The drama of her turbulent life reached its climax at the block. While all Milan rang with the notorious case, Luini was at work on his fresco for the Besozzi chapel, and so the errant Countess became immortalized in the face of St. Catherine on a cloister wall.

Following the custom of the painters of his day, Luini also placed himself in his frescoes. It has been established that the likeness of the white-bearded, kindly faced rabbi in his "Christ Disputing with the Doctors" is that of the artist himself. He appears as well in "The Nativity" at Como and as the centurion on horseback in the "Crucifixion" at Lugano. Only fragments of his life may be available for posterity, but it is at least possible to obtain an authentic glimpse of the face of this lost genius.

The list of Luini's frescoes and paintings is imposing. He was a prolific master in both fields, and many of his subjects are practically without peer. His "Madonna Unadorned," bought by the Brooklyn institution, is called one of the three greatest Madonnas in the world, the others being the Raphael from the Morgan collection, now in the Metropolitan Museum of Art of New York, and the Raphael in the National Gallery in London.

EARNEST WOMEN WORK FOR PEACE

Conference on the Cause and Cure of War, Held In Washington, Discussed Various World Problems—Seeking a Lasting Peace

By MILDRED ADAMS.

A STEADFAST desire to build for a peace that should be permanent, coupled with a realization of the fact that the process of building must be long and slow, marked the second Conference on the Cause and Cure of War, just concluded in Washington. It was called together by a committee composed of the Presidents of nine of the great national women's organizations, and its 600 delegates represented more than a thousand times that number of women.

The findings of this conference may perhaps be taken as a cross-section of the opinions of unofficial America, without axes to grind or policies to defend. They were made after listening from Sunday to Friday to a battery of economic and political experts, historians and world travelers, a foreign Minister, an ex-Senator and two mutually opposed Congressmen.

The findings revealed no desire for a cheap peace, or for a peace too quickly won to be lasting. The delegates showed themselves concerned with whatever in public education or diplomatic and governmental machinery will make for stable relations.

By direct resolution, by specific mention in committee reports and by a letter put into the hands of President Coolidge himself when he received the delegates the conference reaffirmed its belief that the United States should enter the World Court. It determined to keep on working for that entry, voted in favor of the cancellation of war debts and urged Congress to pass the protocol on poison gas and bacteriological weapons.

Policies Advocated.

As policies to be worked out in the future it advocated a new American position on neutrality, so acting that in case of war between States which have accepted tests of aggression as applying among themselves, this country will not so interpret its neutral rights as to furnish support to a power which has defaulted its arbitration agreements;" it also resolved to urge the pass of general arbitration treaties making obligatory that method of settling disputes between nations. It manifested a "determination to educate ourselves in a more thorough understanding of the relation of economic forces to world unrest and the war system."

There was little that was startling in the findings, which, however, were made with earnest sincerity. The few that passed the conference unanimously had about them something of the fervor of religious beliefs. The rest were debated and stripped of haziness until they emerged as concrete expressions of opinion about which there might be disagreement but no misunderstanding.

The nine groups that called the conference number among their members dwellers on farms and in city apartments, citizens of towns and of villages. They are the American Association of University Women, the Council of Women for Home Missions, the Federation of Women's Boards of Foreign Missions of North America, the General Federation of Women's Clubs, the National Board of the Young Women's Christian Associations, the National Council of Jewish Women, the National League of Women Voters, the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union and the National Women's Trade Union League.

As they sat and listened intently in the gilded Hall of Nations, as they talked in corridors or hurried to committee meetings, these women seemed typical mothers and grandmothers and aunts of America. Solid and substantial, inclined to whiteness of unbobbed hair and to a comfortable plumpness of build, they were obviously the people one means when one talks of "the backbone of the country."

There was Mrs. Rufus Dawes of Illinois, Chairman on international relations of the General Federation of Women's Clubs. She is the sister-in-law of the Vice President of the United States. Mrs. Edgerton Parsons of New York represented the university women. Major Julia Stimson, of army nursing fame, talked with the Rev. Caroline Bartlett Crane. The general Chairman was Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt.

Fears and Rivalries.

These same groups met two years ago in Washington to discuss the war disease, its causes and cures. This year, believing that the memories or the files of delegates still held some of the information amassed at those previous sessions, they spent half their time on further aspects of causes and cures, while the rest of the time was devoted to a discussion of immediate problems rising out of American relations with such restless realms as China, Japan, the Philippines, Mexico and the countries of the Caribbean.

Attention was focused upon two main groups of causes of war—those rising out of the passionate desire of all people for security, and those growing from economic rivalries. James T. Shotwell, Professor of History at Columbia University, who was Chief of the Division of History at the 1918 Peace Conference, and Professor Edward Mead Earle of Columbia brought history and economics to bear on those causes.

Professor Earle analyzed the desire for security as "growing out of the psychology fear." And he observed that "only in so far as you mitigate fear and set up security can you encourage disarmament." Professor Earle, discussing the economic causes of war, shook a pessimistic head over American prosperity. "We are so prosperous," he said gravely, "that our country has defied for six years every known economic principle."

He stressed the difficulty of readjustments and said that in his opinion the United States is trying to make pre-war rules and patterns fit post-war conditions. He suggested the necessity of reciprocal trade relations in order to safeguard international competition, and advocated the ultimate building up of a body of law and practice that should do for international trade what is already done for business within a country.

The conference listened to a discussions of arbitration treaties and progressive international disarmament. Congressman Theodore E. Burton of Ohio observed that "the attitude of the United States, with occasional aberrations, has been favorable to disarmament and constructive in that behalf." Denys P. Myers, Librarian of the World Peace Foundation, and James G. MacDonald, Chairman of the Foreign Policy Association, were hopeful of the American attitude. Mr. Myers concluded that "the United States has given little support by example to the movement for compulsory arbitration." Mr. MacDonald saw "our Government and people leaders in this movement, by precept and example, for more than a hundred and twenty-five years," but he admitted that America has contributed little to the success of the movement since 1905.

The conference listened attentively to these more or less academic and historical discussions of trends and policies, but when it came to more immediate problems of American foreign relations there was a noticeable drawing in of chairs, a tightening of atmosphere.

Disagree on Philippines.

Philippine independence was thrashed out by Congressmen, the Resident Commissioner in the United States for the Philippines, and a disinterested expert, all of whom knew the islands intimately. There was disagreement as to solutions. Chinese problems were stated by the Chinese Minister, Dr. Sao-Ke Alfred Sze, just back from Europe. He said that if the powers did not terminate the unequal treaties they had with China, China might do it herself; that while the Chinese people believe in peace, yet "if an unjust situation is supported by force it may have to be overthrown by force." When it came to the problems of Mexico and the Caribbean, charges of economic imperialism and of bribery and corruption on the part of American officials brought one delegate indignantly to her feet.

The resolutions of the conference, opinions on various problems and recommendations for action will be put into concise form by a committee. Then the executive bodies of the nine cooperating organizations will consider them, rejecting or approving as seems best. Such as are approved filter down in the form of lecture and study programs, materials for classes and outlines for Summer conferences. They go to organization branches and to individual women living in cities and villages and on farms over the land, distributed in the hope that they may act as a bit of leaven working for world peace, encouraging the women of the nation, as well, to educate themselves in problems that ideal entails.

SLAVES OF THE PEN

C. P. SCOTT editor of The Manchester Guardian, said the other day that he remembered the time when The Guardian had only two sub-editors and two leader writers. The leader writers, it seems, worked on alternate days, "and usually contradicted each other." Dinner was held sacred, and they habitually quitted the office at 5 o'clock sharp.

"There is a tradition," relates Mr. Scott, "that on a particular day the news arrived at 5 o'clock of the Battle of Sedan. A clerk rushed in with a telegram, but the leader writer had on his hat and coat. 'I am gone,' he said, 'I am gone.'"

FRENCH VIEW OF OUR ART

Woman Writer Tells What She Sees Here

IT IS high time France began to learn something about America's art, according to Mme. Henry Lapauze, now on a visit to the United States. Already, the world must come to America to see many of the masterpieces of great painters and sculptors, she points out and that world should also open its eyes to the art of a country intelligent and rich enough to add so many treasures from European sources to its collections. Therefore, as owner and director of "La Renaissance," an art magazine in Paris, Mme. Lapauze feels it part of her present job to help familiarize her countrymen with what America is doing in both the fine and industrial arts.

What brought this Frenchwoman across the Atlantic for the first time was the heralded industry of America and the almost legendary energy of Americans.

"And I have not been disappointed," said Mme. Lapauze. "Both the industry and the energy are also found in America's art. America is not only collecting art but developing it."

In asserting that France can learn more from America at present than America can learn from France, Mme. Lapauze again pays a compliment to the energy of a nation that in so short a time has acquired an art appreciation commented on—and occassionally lamented—by Old World critics. She finds in our art not only the spirit which, as she puts it, has made America a great nation, but also the imagination Americans are commonly supposed to lack.

Mme. Lapauze believes the inspiration has come from forces in this country with which the artist is surrounded and which will be responsible for America's future place in the art development of the world.

"America in the twentieth century is to the world what Rome and Athens were to the world of an earlier time," said Mme. Lapauze. Her journeys have taken her to some of the American collections; they have also taken her in search of what she calls "American art," which she will reproduce in her magazine.

"Look at your department stores, your skyscrapers, your banking district—Wall Street, you call it," continued Mme. Lapauze. "We have nothing like them in Paris."

The department stores, with their completeness, have surprised her. Not only are they not behind Paris in any of their fashions, but they astonish one, she says, with their luxuries. Paris may create, but America adapts as well as creates.

Though not a suffragist, Mme. Lapauze sees the vote as woman's reward for important work well done. Why should Frenchwomen, she asks, have the vote until they have proved that their active participation in political affairs will be helpful to the country? This they will prove after they have had more experience in business and professional life. The experience, she says, they are now rapidly acquiring. The spirit of American women (whom she refers to as "profonde") is a spirit found increasingly among her own countrywomen. Business and professional life is no longer confined to one class in France. Leisure is becoming a less desirable thing as women from the so-called leisure class take on new civic responsibilities. If the majority at present lack the application of the American woman in her chosen field, the few who are seriously following professions are inspiring others to similar endeavor. There is no stigma, according to this worker, attaching to the gentlewoman who today takes a job in Paris or in any other French city. Many Frenchwomen like herself have been and are being called upon to carry on the business of their husbands, especially those whose husbands were killed during the war.

Mme. Lapauze says she came to America purely as an observer—"to look and not to talk." She expected to find much that she has found, but she was unprepared for the power and strength shown in America's art efforts and architectural triumphs. More than anything else these things determine America's position in the world and are the reason, she holds, why "France must learn from America."

Mme. Lapauze.

MENNONITES OFF ON AN OLD QUEST

Die-Hards, Seeking Freedom for Practice of School and Social Theories, Leave Manitoba for Paraguay

OTTAWA.

A BAND of 350 Mennonites recruited from the Manitoba communities this strange sect established fifty years ago are going forth to seek a new home in Paraguay. Their migration again draws attention to a problem which has been a source of trouble to both the Canadian Federal Government at Ottawa and the Provincial Administrations of Manitoba and Saskatchewan for many years.

When this group informed the Ottawa authorities that land in Paraguay had been offered them on very favorable terms, and since emigration of any group is not regarded as a good advertisement for the Canadian West, the Department of External Affairs made an investigation and advised the Mennonites that the lands offered are involved in a boundary dispute between Paraguay and Brazil and their exact ownership is uncertain. The discontented Mennonites, however, convinced that they are the victims of intolerable tyranny in their present situation, have stuck to their determination.

So now to the annals of the sect, which already contain records of many Odysseys, another is to be added. Proceeding by train through Chicago to New York, they will take ship to the River Plate. They are apparently financing the enterprise out of their own resources, many of them having realized substantial sums from the sale of farms, stock and implements.

Few Changes Made.

The band departing from Winnipeg differs little in appearance from their forefathers who arrived in Manitoba in 1876. The men all have flowing beards and wear long black coats, and the women and girls are garbed in long full-skirted dresses and bright-colored shawls. Spiritually and intellectually, too, they are unchanged; for their intense conservatism in religious and educational outlook is responsible for their migration. They are still seeking a place where they can preserve from modern influences the faith and observances handed down from their fathers.

The founder of the Mennonite sect was a certain Menno Simons, who early in the sixteenth century won a group of Swiss enthusiasts to tenets roughly resembling the Quaker creed, inducing them to leave the State Church. "They maintain," says the Encyclopedia Britannica, "a form of Christianity which, discarding the sacerdotal idea, owns no authority outside the Bible and the enlightened conscience, limits baptism to the believer and lays stress on those precepts which vindicate the sanctity of human life and a man's word."

Owing to their denial of the Christian character of the existing Church and their open disregard of civil authority, both Protestants and Catholics came to view them as dangerous to society and as a result they were subjected to severe persecutions. But the sect, like others, flourished under persecution; the new doctrines gained many followers and spread rapidly into Germany, Holland and France.

Growth of Movement.

By the eighteenth century the Mennonite creed had strong bodies of adherents in various European States, where their peculiar beliefs, particularly their prejudices against military service and oath taking, brought them into constant conflict with different Governments.

The Netherlands treated them with great liberality and Napoleon gave the French Mennonites, who lived mostly in the Vosges, exemption from combatant service, although he insisted on employing them in hospital work during his campaigns. The German Mennonites did not fare so well at the hands of different princelings, and so in 1780 several large bodies of them migrated to Southern Russia on the invitation of Catherine II, who was anxious to secure a leaven of these industrious folk as an example to her backward Russian peasantry. It is from these Mennonite colonies in Southern Russia that the group which has just left Manitoba is descended.

Catherine II granted her protégés immunity from military service and full religious liberty. But in 1870 the Russian Imperial Government issued an edict setting a ten years' limit to their exemption from the conscription law. Holding submission to the order intolerable, the Mennonites sought and obtained permission to leave Russia. Substantial contingents settled in the United States, chiefly in Nebraska and Southwestern States, but a large group elected to try their fortunes in Canada, where members of the sect who had migrated from Pennsylvania had already established themselves in Waterloo County, Ontario.

In the Western World.

The Canadian Government at Ottawa, anxious to settle the prairies of Manitoba, offered generous inducements, allocating to the Mennonites twenty-five townships of good land and, by an Order-in-Council passed in 1873, granting them not merely exemption from military service but the privilege of retaining their own schools and preserving their own economic organization, which was largely communistic.

The Mennonites arrived in Manitoba in 1876 and proceeded to establish village communities and cultivate the soil with their traditional industry. They prospered and increased in number, and, although many of them by the beginning of this century had abandoned their communistic practices and built individual homes for themselves, the sect as a whole remained singularly independent of the non-Mennonite world. It also received reinforcements when the invasion of Western Canada by American farmers began, and several extensive settlements of Mennonites who had moved northward from the United States were established in Saskatchewan and a few small colonies in Alberta. Up to the outbreak of the great war the Mennonites, like the Doukhobors, were regarded by the average English-speaking citizen of Western Canada as eccentric freaks, but no particular objection was raised to the special privileges they enjoyed.

War Started Changes.

The war and its local reactions soon produced a change in popular sentiment toward them. The Mennonite language, to which they have steadfastly clung, is a Low German dialect, and people who talked German and openly professed a serene indifference to the result of the war could not expect to be popular in Western Canada. The Borden Government, however, when it passed the conscription law of 1919, faithfully honored the pledges of a bygone Ministry and, while requiring registration of all Mennonites of military age, accorded them immunity from the operation of the draft.

By the end of the war the Mennonites had fallen into disrepute with a large portion of the Western people and free criticism was directed against their privileged position which enabled them to preserve a particularist social organization and prevented their absorption into the general structure of Canadian society. Editors sent out correspondents to write articles on the Mennonite communities, the Provincial Government dispatched inspectors to report on their schools, and the searchlight of publicity was turned on the sect and its ways of life.

Split Into Factions.

The Mennonites, it was discovered, while presenting an outward front of solidarity, were really split into three groups. The Conferenz Gemeinde was the name given to the radical modernists who were willing and anxious to become thoroughly Canadianized. The Bergthaler Gemeinde were the middle-of-the-road people who were ready to sanction some innovations, but wanted to keep the main fabric of their social organization and traditions intact. The third group, known as the Old Coloniers, refused to take cognizance of any local laws or regulations.

Education was the core of the Mennonite problem. Visiting inspectors discovered that very few of the Mennonite schools attained a reasonable standard of efficiency, especially those conducted by the Old Coloniers. In Manitoba, after a bitter political struggle, special linguistic privileges in the schools were wiped out and a system of Government inspection was inaugurated. The modernist Mennonites accepted the new situation, but the Old Colony group refused to conform.

The local authorities proceeded to enforce the regulations of the Provincial School law, and rather than submit to them a large body of the Old Colony sect sold up their homes and migrated to Mexico. But misfortune dogged their footsteps and, as a result, within the last year a considerable number of them returned to Western Canada and accepted its limitations.

Meanwhile the Old Coloniers in Manitoba had put up a stiff rear-guard fight against the local Department of Education. But public opinion was against them and they could not command the active sympathy of more than a small part of their own sect. So the real diehards decided that the only course left was departure from the land of the oppressor and they began negotiations for land in Paraguay. They are the pathfinders, and, if their report is favorable, other groups will follow.

BRITON SEES US AT WORK

By ROBERT R. HYDE.

He Finds Spirit of Loyalty in Industries Here

SINCE the war, industry in Great Britain has witnessed a steady growth in personnel management, and in spite of trade depression and industrial unrest, the movement is increasing in volume. For some years numerous inquiries have been received from all parts of the world by the Industrial Welfare Society, an organization which acts as a clearing-house on all matters relating to personnel management on behalf of its membership of 700 firms. Therefore the time appeared to be ripe for making a comparison between methods adopted in Great Britain and America. There can be no doubt, whatever the future control and organization of industry, that consideration for the human factor will demand attention. However efficient the mechanical equipment may be, success will ultimately depend upon a stable, contented and well-trained working force.

I arrived in New York at the end of October in order to see something of personnel work in the United States. I had no definite program, and I had an open mind. Since then I have had opportunities of meeting a number of prominent industrialists and inspecting several plants, and although it may appear impertinent to base any generalizations upon so limited an experience, yet some interesting points both of similarity and dissimilarity have been impressed upon me.

The development of personnel work in both countries has proceeded along nearly identical lines. In pre-war days a limited number of pioneers showed the way. During the war, and immediately afterward, many experiments, some wise and some foolish, were made, and for a time the movement made no apparent headway. Then came a thorough overhauling; today the work is extending along a fairly well-defined course and is already being accepted as a normal feature in industrial administration. Personnel work has grown in volume; it has also changed its character, and old-fashioned paternalistic motives have given place to a more worthy conception which demands real cooperation on the part of executives and operatives.

All Industries Now Interested.

In pre-war days the movement was limited in practice, though not entirely, to firms that made a direct appeal to the consumer; today every industry can furnish outstanding examples of well-organized personnel work. I had an opportunity of seeing something of the film industry in California, and was delighted to find that so much was being done to ameliorate the conditions under which difficult and arduous work is being carried on. Real efforts are being made, under able guidance, to deal not only with the personnel problems of individual studios, but also, by means of a central agency in Hollywood, with the problems of the industry as a whole. Again, in visiting the offices of a well-known financial organization I found in existence the same practical activities, the same care being taken to conserve the health and to promote the comfort of each worker.

But the industrial background in this country is so unlike that in Great Britain that comparison is difficult. I find greater alertness everywhere on the part of the people here, but whether this is due to some climatic condition or no I cannot tell—possibly it is. The atmosphere is such that almost anywhere it is possible to produce a visible electric discharge from hair or fingers; it is easy to work long hours without feeling at all jaded or bored—at least that has been my experience. I find, too, a deeper sense of what has been termed "esprit de firm," a readiness on the part of workers, from the chief executive to the humblest member of the staff, to say a good word for the particular organization which employs them. This may be due to the more direct personal dealings prevailing here between the management and the workers than is common in Great Britain, where labor is more highly organized.

ROBERT R. HYDE.

I may be wrong in this, but the impression that greater loyalty to the firm rather than to an outside organization exists has been made.

The existence of a vast and continually developing home market may create a sense of permanence and security in many trades with a consequent lessening of that fear of unemployment which leads to "ca canny," but whether this be cause and effect or not, I have certainly been struck with the general desire to "get on with the job." I was informed on very good authority that recent returns of employment showed that 100 per cent. plus of the population were occupied, or, to explain a paradox, that many workers were doing two jobs.

Americans With Two Jobs.

This would seem to account for an attitude toward work in many with whom I have chatted which in my own country would be regarded as conflicting with commonly accepted ideas of class obligation. A train conductor told me that in his spare time, which in his case amounted to several days per month, he carried on a mail order business; the secretary to the chief executive in a well-known plant earned considerable sums during the evening hours by playing in an orchestra; a waitress in a teashop was filling in a gap between her appearances on the vaudeville stage.

It was refreshing to find examples of this kind, for there can be no possible selfishness in such dual occupancy while work is plentiful and the laborers few. It is so unlike the view one so often meets with, that the more one man does the less there is for his fellow-man to do. I find also that labor-aiding devices are welcomed in the knowledge that enterprise begets progress and progress prosperity.

It may be urged by those who are brought into intimate daily contact with the problems of industry that I have seen only the brighter side of American life. This may be so, and further investigation might reveal many weaknesses and difficulties in the industrial field which are hidden from me, but I have given my impressions as I see them.

A rapidly developing industrial country is not saddled with burdens bequeathed to it by the thoughtlessness of a past generation. The problems of industry in Great Britain are not the growth of this age. They are deep rooted in the past, but real efforts are now being made to deal with them and these efforts are meeting with success. The men who are tackling them are not looking backward with vain regrets to the "good old days," for that is foolishness, but to a Golden Age which they themselves in their day and generation must strive to realize.

In days gone by men sought the ultimate good through devotion, and they gave outward expression to their desire by building upward-pointing spires upon their churches and cathedrals. Would it be true to say of this present age that men are still seeking and striving to attain the same goal, blindly perhaps at times, not so much through devotion as by achievement, and that the growing beauty (for there is beauty in their very grandeur) of the "skyscraper," a significant term in this connection, is but the outward expression of that desire? This is as it appears to me, and this is the impression of America I hope to carry away with me.

PARIS BOURSE

PARIS is about to celebrate the 100th anniversary of the Bourse, that monumental structure begun in 1800, but not finished until 1826. It was designed and planned by Brougniart and was completed by Comte Chabrol, the Préfect of the Seine. Above all, the work was that of Napoleon, who said of the Bourse in December, 1808: "I intend this building to be worthy of the capital and of the vast volume of business that one day will be transacted there."

Napoleon was in Posen at the time and this remark furnishes another example of the close attention he paid to home affairs, even when he was in far distant lands. Thus it was at Moscow that he signed the famous decree relating to the Comédie Française and at Vilna that he annulled a decision of the town council of Sarthe, which had taken from the Solesme Abbey a number of statues, designing to place them in the museum at Le Mans.

However prone he was to do everything on a grandiose scale, Napoleon on this occasion underrated the needed proportions of the Bourse; for the volume of business transacted there as long ago as 1900 far exceeded the capacity of the building and made necessary the erection of two spacious wings. The Stock Brokers' Association will mark the centenary of the famous building by bestowing upon each of its members a commemorative medal.

MANY ASK FOR CITIZENSHIP BUT HALF NEVER QUALIFY

Failure to Complete Naturalization Is Attributed to a Number of Causes

AN analysis of the records of aliens applying for citizenship in the United States during the last eighteen years show that half of the applicants for first papers fail to complete the process leading to citizenship. Harold Fields, director of the Research Bureau of the League for American Citizenship, gives the reasons for this high rate of failure to qualify for full citizenship.

First of all, he says, there are those aliens who do not proceed any further because they have learned from the experiences of other aliens that in all probability their applications will not receive favorable consideration. Then there are those who feel they do not know enough of the language, while others cannot present definite facts about their arrival in this country. Still other groups know they will not receive their second papers because they have not been able to bring their families to this country. In addition to these groups there is a normal percentage that must be subtracted because of death or because the applicants have returned to their native lands.

In addition to these are three other groups, which total a greater number than those mentioned. First there are those who believe that their first papers make them full-fledged citizens; second, those who forgot to take the final steps necessary, and third, those who cannot afford to leave their work by day in order to become naturalized. That the establishment of night courts would relieve this situation and would tend to increase the numbers applying is the belief of the League for American Citizenship.

In the eighteen years of the history of the Bureau of Naturalization approximately 4,800,000 persons have made declarations of intention to become citizens. In the same period a little more than 2,400,000 made applications for their certificates of naturalization, and of those slightly more than 2,000,000 were granted.

Until 1922, when the Cable law was passed making it mandatory for women to become citizens in their own right, applicants for first and second papers were almost entirely male. Today the situation is changed. Women are applying for their papers in increasing numbers. In 1923 the Naturalization Bureau began to list women separately when reporting applicants for second papers. In that year 6,011 women received their citizenship papers, or 4.46 per cent. of all reported. In 1924 they numbered 14,771 or 9.81 per cent. In 1925 there were 18,576, or 12.12 per cent., and for 1926 they will represent a still greater percentage of the whole.

Efforts to become American citizens increased greatly when the war began in 1914. In 1917, when the United States became actively engaged, there was a rush to adopt the title of American citizen. After 1917 there was a falling off in the numbers applying as the war occupied more and more attention. In 1919 more applicants began to appear again, but the numbers again dwindled as the years passed.

This was due to the stronger restrictions which were being imposed upon foreigners. With the coming into force of the Johnson Immigration law in 1924, advantages were bestowed on naturalized citizens which led to another spurt in naturalization, a spurt which quickly spent itself. The pace today is far above the average of pre-war years and is mainly due to the activities that are now carried on by Government agencies, schools, settlement houses and other types of organizations in naturalization work.

"The conclusion to be drawn from these facts," says Mr. Fields, "is that the alien is willing to become Americanized, but that we Americans must first draw his attention and interest to it. So far we have accomplished this only by legislation or by political events that have directly affected citizens. Now we must approach it from the angle of impressing the alien with the value of becoming an American citizen."

A COLLEGE INNOVATION

NEW students are now being photographed upon registration at Pennsylvania State College, just as travelers are photographed for their passports. Five prints are made. One of these is attached for identification to the student's record in the office of the registrar; others are for use of the college physician, the dean and the head of the department in which the student is enrolled.

SELF-EDUCATION IN JAPAN GROWS

Workers Eagerly Attend Schools Supported By Labor

JAPAN'S workers are making progress in self-education, according to a survey recently made by the World Association for Adult Education. From feeble beginnings in 1921 and 1922, the number of schools maintained by Japanese labor unions has risen to more than twenty. They are said to be quite effective in attaining their announced object of "producing a proletarian culture" and "offering equality of educational opportunity to the workers and raising their cultural standards."

Shortage of funds is compensated for by the zeal of the promoters and pupils. It is said that difficulty is being found in making room for all those desiring accommodation. The Labor School of Tokio, run by the Workers' Educational Association under the direction of Bunji Suzuki, President of the General Federation of Labor (he is sometimes dubbed the Samuel Gompers of Japan), trains officials of trade unions and also provides "social education" for the rank and file.

In Osaka, the great industrial city, there is a workers' school, founded in 1922, with courses of three and six months and 327 graduates. Social problems, economic history, law and economics are the principal items of the curricula of these schools, which are expected to play a big part in the development of the Japanese labor movement

A Year's Record as a Guide to Buyers

The facts regarding Dodge Brothers sales during 1926 are worth recording. They represent the ever-increasing recognition of fundamental worth and extra value.

As the year draws to a close, the sales approximate 340,000 cars—an increase of more than 30% over 1925.

This again tells the story of public appreciation of dependability, but tells it more impressively than ever before. It reflects the value and importance of the numerous improvements that create an even greater degree of smoothness, silence and ease. It emphasizes the greater comfort and beauty.

The record for 1926, both in engineering progress and sales growth, is the best in Dodge Brothers history. In sum and substance it is nothing less than a helpful guide to every buyer who seeks the largest possible value for each dollar expended

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR ON TOPICS IN THE NEWS

CANADA'S DIPLOMATIC MOVE CREATES A NEW SITUATION

Appointment of a Representative at Washington Emphasizes Diminishing Distinction Between Ambassadors and Ministers

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The Canadian Minister is selected by the Canadian Government, which he represents. His credentials are signed by the King, as are those of the British Ambassador, who represents the British Government. The new situation created emphasizes the constantly diminishing distinction between Ambassadors and Ministers.

It is only since the second Cleveland Administration, when Mr. Bayard was appointed to London as our first diplomatic representative holding that rank, that the United States Government has been represented by Ambassadors.

The first legislative proposal made in Congress leading to the creation of Ambassadors was the resolution introduced by William E. Mason of Illinois in 1855. Mr. Mason, while a member of Congress, was also an important politician, and had learned that Robert Lincoln, a resident of Chicago, was about to be appointed Minister to London. The resolution proposed to raise the rank of our Minister to that of Ambassador. It was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. As Chairman of that committee I introduced a substitute resolution which was unanimously adopted by the committee and reported to the House. It proposed that, at the next international conference or congress, whenever that might occur, the United States, as one of the Governments represented by Ministers and not Ambassadors, should take occasion to suggest that the rules of the Congress of Aix-la-Chapelle and of Vienna 1815-18 be revised, the purpose being to merge the two ranks of Ambassador and Minister Plenipotentiary, in order to secure equality of representation for all powers, great and small, or in case that proposition should not prevail, that the title of Ambassador be given to all chiefs of missions. The League of Nations now assembled at Geneva would now be the body to pass upon the merits of this proposition.

In a lecture before the School of Diplomacy, Columbia University, in 1909, Mr. Foster criticized the act of 1893 as an unadvised piece of legislation, bad in principle and inconvenient and injurious in operation, especially as tending to introduce undesirable ceremonial pretensions and practices and to restrict the diplomatic representation of the United States to men of fortune.

John W. Foster had been Secretary of State, Minister to Russia, Austria and Mexico. Again, Mr. Foster, on the proper grade of diplomatic representatives, is quoted as follows, Vol. IV, p. 741, John Bassett Moore's International Law Digest:

"The foreign Ambassadors at Washington claim as the personal representatives of their sovereigns the right, when present at official ceremonies conducted by the Government of the United States, to come next to the President, thus outranking the Secretary of State and other members of the Cabinet and all other officials of Government—executive, legislative and judicial.

"This claim the Department of State, in principle, concedes, except as to the Vice President. The Ambassadors have as a courtesy yielded precedence to the Vice President."

It is not only in Washington that there are embarrassments and misapprehensions. The Ambassador today is a diplomatic agent representing the Government which appoints him, and especially the Foreign Office of that Government. The claim that he represents the person of the sovereign has been the occasion of discussions in England. In Greville's Memoirs we find:

"With reference to diplomatic rank, I heard only last night for the first time that the Duke of Sutherland had some time ago addressed a formal remonstrance to Palmerston against foreign Ministers (not Ambassadors) having place at the palace (which means going first out to dinner over himself et suos pares), a most extraordinary thing for a sensible man to have done. * * * He got for answer that her Majesty exercised her own pleasure in this respect in her own palace. The rule always has been that Ambassadors (who represent the persons of their sovereigns) have precedence of everybody; Ministers (who are only agents) have not. * * * In a note it is said to have been afterward stated by her Majesty that foreign Ministers should take precedence after Dukes and before Marquesses."

Much has occurred since then (1840) to render the distinction between an Ambassador and a Minister more artificial and tending to create unnecessary embarrassment.

The Ambassadors of reigning sovereigns might claim an advantage over diplomatic agents of the same rank who represent republican forms of Government.

The British Ambassador had become in fact, at Washington and elsewhere, the Ambassador of the empire, but now he does not represent the Government of Canada. Hereafter Australia, New Zealand, South Africa or any other of the nations constituting the English-speaking league of nations known as the empire might also establish direct diplomatic representation.

Holland during the period of the republic was represented by Ambassadors. There seems no reason why Holland should not have an Ambassador in Washington as well as Belgium. In 1816 the British missions were divided into seven classes, of which Paris, St. Petersburg, Vienna, Madrid, The Hague and Constantinople were filled by Ambassadors.

Under present conditions to maintain the distinction between Ambassadors and Ministers is as if in all constitutional Governments large constituencies should be represented in an upper house and small constituencies in a lower house. Equality of representation is the principle maintained everywhere in legislative bodies and should apply today to the diplomatic corps in every capital. PERRY BELMONT.

INSTALMENT PLAN NEEDS DIRECTING

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Critics of the instalment plan seem to overlook the fact that the fault does not lie in the plan, but rather in the direction it has taken. There is no question that a great deal too much instalment buying has been diverted from savings accounts, life insurance and investments toward the purchase of non-essentials. The instalment plan is here to stay and it is as well to recognize the fact and see what can be done under the circumstances. Probably the oldest form of instalment buying and still the best is life insurance, though very little of it as yet is on a monthly basis. Some investment brokers are selling bonds and stocks on instalments, but they have not very generally advertised the fact. Bankers have apparently done nothing to develop savings accounts by some scheme of regular monthly deposits of uniform amounts. There has been no general increases in the rate paid for savings in forty years at least, and an increase of ½ to 1 per cent. yearly in special cases would not greatly increase the average rate paid, while it could be used as a great inducement to systematic savers.

Concerted action by the insurance companies, investment brokers and bankers will save the situation, not by trying to stop or discourage a habit, but by diverting it to proper and productive channels.

DRY LAW ADVOCATES.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Prohibition, as a topic of conversation, is on the lips of all. Some employ it as a scapegoat to be kicked around and ridiculed; others with uplifted eyes refer to it as a blessing.

The results of prohibition are both praised and condemned. Statistics have been furnished to prove it a boon and also a calamity.

Heretofore, opposition to the Eighteenth Amendment took shape in word only. Now it takes the form of State referenda. We can only guess the next step. Many even predict that it will decide the coming Presidency. Regardless of all this, the fact remains that both the supporters and opponents are becoming louder and louder in their acclaims.

Laws, to command respect and obedience, must come about through natural growth and selection. That accounts for the wholesale violations of the Eighteenth Amendment, which was suddenly thrust upon our people with subsequent unpleasant results.

Prohibition has brought about new conditions, not the least of which is the creation of the bootleg industry. The grievance borne against Volstead-ism by the saloonkeeper robbed of his livelihood is offset by the good-will of the vast army of bootleggers and others whose bank accounts have grown fat through the passage of the Eighteenth Amendment.

The proper way to solve a problem is to consider the facts as they are, not as we think they ought to be. Cruel as it may appear, the prohibition cause counts among its supporters those guided by their pocketbooks, as well as those guided by their consciences.

In addition to representing the moral views of a multitude, prohibition is tolerated because it does not prohibit and because it is a new source of revenue. DANIEL RIVKIN.

FEEDING THE BIRDS.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Interest in bird study will grow even more rapidly if people have birds around their homes. May I make a suggestion? When snow covers the ground the birds find it exceedingly difficult to obtain food. A shallow tray filled with crumbs and other bird delicacies and placed in a sheltered part of the yard is sure to attract hungry birds, who lose much of their natural timidity in the desire for food and are much more easily observed than in the Summer.

Even those who live in apartments can fasten a shelf to the window sill and provide endless entertainment for themselves and earn the undying gratitude of the starving feathered creatures. ALAN T. DEVOE.

FRENCH IDENTITY CARDS.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I was glad to read in THE TIMES the complaint of an American woman in Nice about the expense and trouble of obtaining the French identity card. For Americans who are employed in France the vexations are still greater.

It is difficult to see why an American passport with French visa is not sufficient for purposes of identification; for revenue a head tax could be collected on entry.

NATIONAL PARK BOUNDARIES REVISED AFTER LONG STUDY

Director of the Service Gives Details of Work Done by The Commission on Outdoor Recreations And Reasons for Action

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I think it is high time that something be said about the activities of W. G. Van Name, whose letter "National Park Grabs" appears in THE TIMES of Dec. 8. Mr. Van Name has consistently misrepresented the careful and painstaking work which is being done toward the revision of national park boundaries.

The President's Committee on Outdoor Recreation, consisting of several members of the Cabinet, appointed a commission some two years ago to study the national park boundaries, looking to adjustments that would work for better administration and would allow certain additions to the present parks which were felt to be necessary.

The commission made its first careful study of the Yellowstone situation in the Summer of 1925, and recommended unanimously the addition of the Tetons to Yellowstone Park, as well as the addition of the great watershed of the upper Yellowstone River, which would make it possible to preserve the wild life far better than with the present artificial boundaries. These recommendations went to the Congress, but no action was taken at the last session, as one or two of the Idaho representatives wished to have an elimination made of the southwest corner, known as the Bechler River section, so it could be used for reservoir purposes.

In the same Summer the commission recommended that a substantial addition to the Grand Canyon National Park be carved out of the Kaibab National Forest and eliminated one or two desert areas on the south side. This bill was passed by the House and is now awaiting action in the Senate.

A report was also made on the proposed addition to the Sequoia National Park. Both Colonel Greely and myself were favorable to the addition of the two great canyons of the Kings and the Kern. However, some objection had arisen as to the Kings River section, which we expect will later be overcome, and a bill was signed by the President for the addition of the Kern River section, including Mount Whitney, the highest peak in continental United States, a total of 352 square miles. Mr. Van Name precipitated himself into an earlier discussion on the proposed changes, claiming that Colonel Greely had sold out to the lumbermen in view of the fact that a small area at the south was to be eliminated from the park. When I taxed him before the Public Lands Committee several years ago for his evidence he was unable to give any.

As regards Mr. Van Name's statements concerning the cutting of timber within Yosemite Park on the west side, and which he has backed up with a pamphlet showing pictures of logged-over lands, &c., the Yosemite Lumber Company has owned long before the park was created many thousands of acres within the boundary of the park. Congress has never seen its way to buy this land.

Mr. Van Name overlooks, when he attacks the Park Service regarding the use of Hetch Hetchy Valley, in the Yosemite National Park for water and power purposes for the City and County of San Francisco, that the act granting rights of way and land for this purpose was passed by an act of Congress and approved by the President Dec. 19, 1913, almost three years before the creation of the National Park Service.

By my own efforts in the Sequoia National Park I did secure personal contributions of some $200,000, by which the magnificent stands of sequoia gigantea were turned over without cost to the Government. We did have the right to exchange the timber within the boundary of the Yosemite National Park under the act which Mr. Van Name disparages, but which has enabled us to give for timber and land along the beautiful Wawona Road, timber in isolated sections of the park, and where later on reforestation should bring the country back to a measure of its original attractiveness.

Mr. Van Name makes reference to changes in the boundaries of other parks, which shows a woeful lack of information. He states that a piece was trimmed off of Mount McKinley Park, in Alaska, to permit a mining development. As a matter of fact, one or two important additions have been made to Mount McKinley Park. There is a provision in the enabling act which allows prospecting and mining.

In connection with the Rocky Mountain National Park, the principal elimination was on the east side and was for the purpose of excluding from the park much of the privately owned land in the Estes Park and Long Peak district. A small tract on the north boundary was also eliminated, owing to the fact that the old boundary cut across a small lake which was needed for use as a storage reservoir. The proposed addition south of the park comprises 79.6 square miles, to and beyond the Arapaho Glacier.

As regards Mr. Van Name's statement about Mount Rainier National Park, the changes are minor ones to conform to natural boundary lines and in the interest of good administration. There is a net addition of 422 acres.

HOOKER BLAMED FOR CORPS DEFEAT

To the Editor of The New York Times:

It would appear, after an examination of the facts, that John N. Ware has heaped unmerited scorn on the Eleventh Corps of the Federal Army at Chancellorsville. That the Eleventh Corps was driven from its position and badly beaten is true, but the implication of cowardice is undeserved. General E. P. Alexander, of the Confederate Army, in his "Military Memoirs of a Confederate," speaking of the concentration of Stonewall Jackson's troops in front of the Eleventh Corps, says "Jackson had made his play so far with fair success, and he now stood ready with over 20,000 men to surprise Howard's (Eleventh Corps) 13,000."

That Jackson stood in such a position was the fault of Hooker, who neglected this wing of his army entirely, and of Howard, the Corps Commander, who was careless in his dispositions for security. Moreover, the Eleventh Corps at the time of the attack did not number 13,000 but only 10,000, as Barlow's brigade had been detached and assigned to Sickles. This left the corps without a reserve.

The facts show that the corps fought as well as it could have been expected to fight, having had its right flank turned at the first attack. General Alexander says: "Much undeserved obloquy was heaped upon the Eleventh Corps for their enforced retreat. No troops could have acted differently. All of their fighting was of one brigade at a time against six."

THE CONSTITUTION DEFINES A SENATOR'S QUALIFICATIONS

View Is Taken That the Upper House of Congress Is Not Empowered to Reject a Member Who Has Been Properly Elected to Office

To the Editor of The New York Times:

An editorial in THE TIMES referring to the contention of Senator Reed of Pennsylvania respecting the power of the Senate to expel Senator Gould for bribery alleged to have been committed by him is entitled "A Queer Theory" and disposes of the possibility of Senator Reed's position being one justified in law and democratic theory.

The Constitution, it is true, makes each house "the judge of the elections, returns and qualifications of its own members." But it cannot supportably be said that "an unlimited grant of power lies in the word 'qualification'," for the Constitution itself defines "qualifications" when it provides that a Senator shall be at least thirty years of age, a citizen of the United States for nine years, and an inhabitant of the State for which he has been chosen.

Madison, writing for The Federalist, said: "The qualification proposed for Senators, as distinguished from those of Representatives, consists in a more advanced age and a longer period of citizenship. * * *"

The Constitution itself uses the word "qualifications" in such manner as to indicate this restrictive meaning when it provides that "the electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State Legislature."

Our Republic is a unique combination—both a nation of men and a union of Commonwealths. The basis of sovereignty is to be found in the people and in the States. There is no sovereignty in Congress, which is purely a representative body, the House being representative of its sovereign people and the Senate of its sovereign States.

The electorate of each Congressional district is a unit represented by a member of the House. The people of each State, as a similar unit, are entitled to representation by two Senators. In the one case, the sovereign power rests in the people of each Congressional district as a part of the nation; in the other it lies in the people as citizens of each State, which in turn is a part of the Union of Commonwealths.

In the last analysis, it is the joint voice and judgment, however violent and prejudiced, of the people of each unit that is to be heard in the House and in the Senate. It matters little whether that voice, or the expression of that judgment, finds favor with the representatives of other units. The test of the matter lies in the question of whether a sovereign State has expressed its will by an election in accordance with our written law. If the representative be honestly and regularly elected, it is not for the citizens of other States to pass their judgment concerning the expediency or the wisdom of the choice.

The definition of crime, in terms the definition of immorality, is not uniform throughout the land. If one moral standard of one group of States is to pass judgment on the moral code of another, what vestige of sovereignty which equal representation in the Senate was intended to grant, remains? The Senate expels and the State returns the representative to the Senate upon a subsequent election. To be consistent, the Senate must again expel, for the fundamental theory of the Senate's expulsion lies in the contention that the other States have a voice in the selection of the Senator from any one State and the Senate's distaste cannot be overridden by that Senator's constituency.

The case of Senator Gould is a striking example in this regard. He was openly charged with the offense of bribery prior to his election. The judicial opinion expressing him guilty was published and spread before his constituents. They elected him nevertheless. In this situation is it for the other States to disapprove the choice of the people of Maine and deprive that State of its right of equal suffrage guaranteed to it by the Constitution?

It would seem that the analysis should rest on a broader basis than on the personal fortunes of Senator Gould or even on an interpretation of the provisions of the Constitution. We are feeling the heavy encroaching hand of the National Government more heavily daily. The Eighteenth Amendment, the Federal Inheritance Tax laws, are examples of a nation's grasp of minorities that increasingly crushes individual and States' rights. If one State is to have a voice in the selection of the representative of another, we spread this abuse of centralisation of national power. It is a dangerous tendency and every encroachment that tends to increase should be seriously resisted. The individual hardship will be alleviated to the beneficence of the general welfare.

THE TACNA-ARICA MATTER

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The need of Bolivia for a seaport is binding us, I feel, to some important aspects of the problem Peru is faced with by Secretary Kellogg's proposal. Chile's prompt acceptance of the principle that she should sell her claim to Bolivia is sufficient indication of how little the province means to her national life. But for Peru the situation is far different.

The territory has been Peruvian always, since the Empire of the Incas, until Chile took it in 1880. It has never been Bolivian. It is rainless, like the rest of the west coast of Peru, but when irrigated the valleys are very fertile. The population of the province is about 40,000. Add to these the 10,000 or more native-born refugees in Peru. Tacna is even now a city of 14,000. It was the third city of Peru when Chile took it. In the many little settlements in the valleys of the territory are numbers of small farms owned and worked by Peruvians—women, chiefly, in the last years, for the Chileans have expelled so many of their men, or deported them to the nitrate provinces which she took from Peru and Bolivia at the same time that she got ten-year possession of Tacna and Arica.

Any one who questions that there was a continuous reign of terror by Chileans, abetted by the Chilean officials, should read the Lassiter report.

A fair plebiscite would have gone for Peru. By preventing the holding of the plebiscite, Chile has forfeited all claims to the territory under the Treaty of Ancon. Legally and morally the title goes to Peru, which explains why Chile is willing to sell her claim. But before we ask Peru to sell hers, we should consider the history of the past four years.

It is, of course, impossible to hold now the plebiscite that could not be held a year ago. What, then, should be done? The just answer is clear, and justice is often statesmanship. The territory belongs to Peru. That should be so declared. Bolivia does not need territory. She would be the worse, not the better, off for so many unwilling citizens controlling her seacoast. But she does need an outlet to the sea. A right of way over the railroad and joint participation in its administration should be given her, with a free zone in the Port of Arica, and her own docks, lighters and customs officials.

How to get Chile to agree? Well, her financial situation is very bad. Chile has just obtained here a loan of $42,000,000. But she needs many millions more, so her statesmen say, for new military and naval equipment. Before letting her have them we might make some such stipulation as the above. It would be in the cause of justice.

Our present proposal will, I fear, merely serve to change two old friends, Peru and Bolivia, into jealous rivals.

DIVINING RODS AND PSYCHICS

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In a lecture on the possibilities of psychic research before Clark University Dr. Schiller spoke of the dousers or persons able to locate water with the divining rod. This is not a new discovery: in fact many years ago the dousers were busy locating wells in the farming regions of Pennsylvania, as well as the Middle States. I discovered a number of wells by this method. The most important one, I think, was on the Arizona desert.

In the mining districts, divining rod men, using a metallic rod with magnetic beads, are numerous, but in all my experience I have never seen one of them demonstrate their rod to a finality. That water can be located under ground goes without saying and the implement used is a forked willow, which in the hands of an adept will twist the bark off in the effort to point down to water.

It has been reported that with a willow or witch hazel rod, oil and precious metals can be located, but my opinion is that the strong affinity which the willow has for water, working through the psychic powers of the holder, will turn the wand down when passing over a fissure vein for the reason that all vertical veins contain more or less water.

Not every one can locate water with a "water witch," although there are undoubtedly many who have the power and are unaware of the fact. That the power is derived from the same psychic phenomena as that which is claimed by mediums in tipping tables, raps, &c., I do not believe from the fact that my wife, who can make a table tip, cannot influence a forked stick even if led over a water course, while I, for whom the table stubbornly refuses to move, can find an underground stream with a willow while blindfolded.

EARLY PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

A group of teachers in Brooklyn have reached the very definite conclusion that the first free public school in America was established in that borough in 1661. The investigation also disclosed that this school was authorized by the governing body of the village on July 4, 1661. Evidently it took 115 years for the seed thus planted to grow into the Declaration of Independence.

We shall be glad to know if any one has definite historical information that will alter our findings. A public school was established in Manhattan in 1638, but ours was a free public school.

WHAT HAPPENED IN ROME

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Life in Rome is so quiet and peaceful, so "grazioso"—as the Italians say—so full of human and historic interest, with no element of the tragic or dramatic, that we who are either visitors or residents are puzzled to understand the tone of recent letters from friends in the United States.

For example, a friend writes: "What about all these disturbances in Rome?" Another writes: "I suppose you have your sons in school, but I do not see how they are able to study through the excitement and troublous times in Rome."

The young Fascisti, boys in their teens and early twenties (my son among them), who have pledged their loyalty to the State and the spirit of Fascismo, rushed here and there through the city, in crowds, madly desiring to give expression to their rage over the attempt on the life of their chief and their joy over his escape.

They were like so many college boys who had to beat up some one because of an insult to their alma mater or its respected President. The psychology is no different. It ended in every one singing lustily the Fascist hymn, "Giovanezza," and other patriotic songs; and whoever did not salute the flag was properly spanked. No one took it seriously, and by the next day it was all over.

The boys in their excitement made rushes on houses of known Communists and on the offices of the opposition press, which were protected by the carabinieri—the State police. The Fascisti managed to enter one house of a Communist and smashed things up pretty generally. The police and the Fascisti in some cases came out a little the worse for these clashes.

I wonder how many of these Fascist boys were lectured by their elders as mine was on their return home that night that such uncontrolled excitement was not true patriotism; that it did their cause and country much harm and that it was not the real spirit of Fascismo.

The general aspect of Rome is one of industry, contentment, cheerfulness, tranquility and sense of security.

I was told by some foreign visitors I, not being an Italian, must carry always my passport. No Italian suggested this precaution. I go everywhere and at any hour, often alone. No one has ever even looked at me, although I am so evidently not of Latin blood. Why all this hysteria?

POTASH FROM THE DEAD SEA

To the Editor of The New York Times:

There is one very important aspect of the potash question which has been overlooked or neglected or minimized by those dealing with the matter, and that is the enormous amounts of potash readily available in the Dead Sea in Palestine.

Although such reference books as the Encyclopaedia Britannica contain the essential facts, a recently published book by an American expert does not even mention the Dead Sea. But a couple of years ago the British Government issued a rather comprehensive report, in which it is stated that the salt content of the Dead Sea is estimated to be as follows:

	Metric Tons
Potassium Chloride	2,000,000,000
Magnesium Bromide	980,000,000
Magnesium Chloride	22,000,000,000
Sodium Chloride	11,900,000,000
Calcium Chloride	6,000,000,000

Owing to the climatic conditions, the evaporation from the surface of the Dead Sea is enormous and is estimated to be 6,000,000 tons of water daily. The production of very pure potassium chloride by cheap solar evaporation at a point most advantageous for transportation it is expected will soon become a reality.

Some think it possible that the German potash interests are trying to get control of the great Palestinian deposit or reservoir and that the loan now being sought by them might possibly be used for this purpose. It is a good business proposition from the German standpoint, but before American investors put their money into any bonds of this kind it would be well for them to consider not only the security behind the bonds, but also the possible uses to which the money may be put. With Palestine as an independent producer, the so-called German monopoly would be held in check, to the benefit of the American farmer and consumer.

DR. MIMS DISPUTED ON KLAN

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In his recent address before the Southern Society, Dr. Edwin Mims, Professor of English at Vanderbilt University, is quoted as saying: "There is a South that boasts of its original contribution to the nation in the organization of the Ku Klux Klan, and there is a South that believes that the Klan is un-American and un-Christian."

One may scarcely conceive of an assertion which is more historically unsound and presently misleading. Dr. Mims talks of two wholly different things belonging to different periods as if they were one and the same thing! The Ku Klux Klan which rescued the South from the destructive forces of Reconstruction misrule is not to be thought of as in any way connected with the recently organized society which has assumed the nomenclature of the erstwhile protector of our political institutions.

The old organization preserved for the good of the Republic what political scavengers were about to seize and destroy. The new organization appears to appeal chiefly to religious prejudices; and, in reaching for political power, it has expanded more successfully in the North than in the South.

WHAT IS TO BE DONE NOW?

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Permit me to announce to my fellow biologists throughout the world that I have isolated the germ of coercive morality, a disease known to the medical profession as aphasia agitans, of which the chief characteristic is a settled belief that the victim is born to rule the moral world—and by force.

It, of course, ignores the fact that God cannot do it. But as it is a form of conceit rapidly developing into insanity if not checked, that is to be expected. It glories in agitation and has a large staff of well-paid instruments at work. The germ has hitherto been so small as to preclude isolation, but by throwing a little more light on it I found it. It has no brain cavity.

MONOGRAMMED FRUIT.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The news that New Jersey growers are producing initialed apples simply means that Jersey horticulturists have awakened to a trick foreign growers have practiced for more than a hundred years.

In France, where peaches may only be grown outside of a hothouse and the trees are trained flat against a sheltered wall, it has long been the custom to produce extra fine specimens with the grower's coat of arms, monogram or initials on the fruit.

The trick is really very simple. Upon the side of the fruit exposed to the sun there is placed, before the fruit has matured, a stencil form of the design. The sun attends to the rest. Upon maturity the stencil is removed and the pattern stands forth for the uninitiated to marvel at.

OUT OF THE MOUTHS—

To the Editor of The New York Times:

As a comparative study of what sort of verse interests New York children today and the children of London of 300 years ago when they liked "Ride a cock horse to Banbury Cross," this is what I heard two tots recite on a sidewalk yesterday:

I should worry,
I should care,
I should marry a millionaire.
If he should die,
I should cry,
I should marry another guy.

For an anthology of street brats' rhymes here are two more stanzas I heard a short time ago:

Mary Ellen, Mary Ellen, Mary Ellen, ah!
Kissed a fellow in a Broadway car,
You tell ma, and I'll tell pa,
Mary Ellen, Mary Ellen, ah, ah, ah!

LORD BALFOUR'S REPORT

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The article entitled "British Premiers Remodel Empire," by P. W. Wilson contains erroneous impressions of the Balfour report and its significance.

The Balfour report is significantly empty of anything original and will have a quiet future unless conscious misinterpretations are made for party purposes in Canada, Australia, South Africa or possibly in Britain. Lord Balfour did not "assert in explicit terms" anything. He simply brought in a report of a committee of which he was Chairman and upon which sat representatives, equal in power and prestige with him, from several of the equal sister nations of the Commonwealth.

There is no parallel between the present situation and that of 1775. There was and is no imminent danger of the dissolution of the Commonwealth and still less of the outbreak of civil war. In brief, the dominions (God forgive the unfortunate accident of the name dominion) have achieved by constitutional means a status which this country won by revolution.

A few technical and historical errors might be pointed out. The treaty of Dec. 6, 1921, between Britain and Ireland was not a treaty of peace but a constitutional treaty or convention and might be compared with the agreements arrived at with the other dominions, Canada in 1867, Australia in 1900, South Africa in 1910. Again, Lord Durham's "famous dispatch" was not a dispatch but a report of a specially appointed commissioner on observations and recommendations upon his term of Governorship in Canada. It was written, not by Charles Buller, but by himself.

Mr. Wilson says that "notice is given to the world that no Dominion is responsible for any treaty until that treaty has been signed and ratified by that Dominion." The present writer is of the opinion that actions speak louder than words. In the first place, the report is simply a recommendation of a committee to a non-formal congress. No legislation has taken place; neither the committee nor the conference has the power to bind any citizen or portion of territory in the Commonwealth. In the second place, such procedure in foreign affairs is already an established fact. The only significance of the report is that the leaders of the Commonwealth have expressed themselves as being favorable to a precedent already established.

There has not been and is not any move either in Ireland or in South Africa to turn "for guidance to the United States * * * for elaborating a written Constitution for the British Empire." Rather the tendency has been to avoid inflexible, formal constitutional practice as established in this country in favor of the British practice which "slowly broadens down from precedent to precedent."

SANTA CLAUSIAN RESEARCH

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Doctoral dissertations may be, as THE TIMES says, a mine for future historians, but some of them are low-grade ore. Let the would-be Ph. D. undertake something which has more to do with our civilization. Let him investigate Santa Claus. We all know that Santa Claus is not an essential tradition of our people, but was introduced among us in the nineteenth century quite deliberately and artificially as a picturesque foreignism. It must be possible to determine the date. It must be possible to show in how large a part of any foreign country he ever had a spontaneous life before he was planted and cultivated in our soil. Find out how long after his naturalisation here he kept the name St. Nicholas, and at what date he assumed the alias of Santa Claus. Find out how long he kept the fur coat appropriate to a reindeer driver, and at what date he was stripped of this and given the cheaper red coat which cannot possibly keep him equally warm; and, if possible, find out how the robbery was managed.

Then investigate the ethics of Santa Claus. It is charged that in teaching children to believe in Santa Claus as a supernatural being we are teaching a religion known to be false. It is alleged in his favor that teaching children to believe in Santa Claus imbues them with idealism, imaginativeness, poetic spirit and [illegible]

Let the truth of all [illegible] things be scientifically determined. We could in general directly observe the effects since every such psychological [illegible] is as a rule the composite effect of many causes; but it might be possible to determine whether in the half or three-quarters of a century since the worship of Santa Claus has been officially inculcated among us the United States has had a greater increase, or a less decrease, in superstitiousness, unbelief, idealism, imaginativeness, poetic spirit or blitheness than have other countries which have not caught the Santa Claus microbe.

NEW CAR DEVICES NEED ATTENTION

Filters, Air Cleaners and the Braking System Held Inspection for Efficient Motor Service

By FREDERICK C. RUSSELL.

HAVING become vital parts of the modern automobile, accessories and efficiency devices require the same amount of care and service that is demanded by the more integral parts of the car. Much of this new equipment is charged with the duty of saving some vital part of the car. This point appears to be overlooked by many automobile owners. They buy certain things for the car, or buy a car standard equipped with such devices, and let it go at that. The type is similar to the person who never bothers to inspect or refill a fire extinguisher.

As a result of this belief that accessories are troubleproof, considerable damage is being done to those very parts of cars which these new units are intended to preserve. Where there is not such a direct relationship between accessory and car the neglect of the former simply shortens its useful life and hastens the day of replacement.

As one repairer puts it, "The modern automobile is no better than the care of its efficiency devices and accessories." If the oil filter is neglected it may prove to be a source of serious damage. The same can be said of a motor thermostat. An improperly adjusted spring control device can hasten the breakage of a spring leaf.

Just as a faulty carburetor can make an engine and its drive line look until the universal joints need to be replaced so can a fuel rectifier, if neglected, damage the engine it is working with. The term "accessory" is relative. No one can tell just where any device ceases to be a vital part of a car and becomes a mere appendage. The tendency is to regard an improvement as a fitment until it becomes general; then it is regarded as a vital part. In this connection it is well to remember that such things as water pumps, distributers, battery, starters, generators, vacuum tanks and many other units not considered as vital parts were once "accessories."

Use Care to Small Things.

Every motorist appreciates that trouble with his generator may mean not merely damage to that instrument itself but serious trouble all along the line. Now he must learn that the new things on cars are just as apt to damage themselves and the parts they are designed to protect as any other accessory that has earned for itself the distinction of being an integral part of the car. He must learn that it is not reasonable to expect the newer equipment to function perfectly unless he gives it reasonable care and attention.

I know a motorist who threw away a motor thermostat because the cooling system boiled over. He condemned the accessory as being good for nothing but trouble, completely overlooking the ease of starting and gasoline economy which it had provided for a year of hard driving. Upon removing the article he found that the valve had stuck to a degree where it had to be hammered open.

Would this same owner have condemned his engine had he removed the head and found the cylinders choked with carbon?

The motorist is not entirely to blame for the unnecessary troubles which he is beginning to have with the newer equipment. These devices have been offered to him as life-savers for his car and in the general excitement he has had little opportunity to consider the fact that the best of life-savers need occasional inspection and adjustment.

One cannot praise too highly the many splendid developments in the equipment line during the past two years, nor can one overlook the fact that few things can cause more grief than these neglected devices. It is true, for instance, that an oil filter will cut itself out automatically when a point is reached where its filter packing is so loaded as to block normal circulation of the oil. But just before that point is reached, or if the automatic cut-out fails to operate, there is a period where the fresh oil put into the crankcase is actually contaminated.

Just a little inspection now and again can prevent any such trouble and can make these devices 100 per cent. serviceable. No one should condemn a car because the pump leaked or because the timing chain slipped, for it is understood that these features require inspection and adjustment. The same attitude will be necessary before the newer efficiency devices can be regarded as entirely successful.

Attention to Air Cleaners.

Air cleaners involving rotating parts are bound to give trouble if the bearing of the rotor is never treated to a few drops of lubricant. Because no consideration for this fact is entertained by car owners, and because such devices are assumed to be troubleproof, many of them are being taken off and discarded. This is unfortunate, for when a motorist does a thing of this sort he simply hastens the discard of the complete car.

Oil rectifiers are subject to some of the vagaries of vacuum tanks. Motorists have not discarded the vacuum system, though it has kept many a repairman in spending-money. Why, then, should they condemn a rectifier if it goes wrong and burns off their oil? When it does anything on this order there is something vitally wrong with it—and that is usually failure to inspect the device occasionally.

Any accessory or attachment needs attention, whether it has working parts or not. The story is told of one motorist who got into trouble with an air cleaner with no movable parts. He had attached it to his 1925 car and seemed well pleased with the way dirt collected in the holder instead of passing through to the engine. But one day the electric system on the car shorted. The neglected cleaner had loosened and dropped to the positive connection at the electric generator. This connection was covered with a rubber sack, but the cleaner, in bearing upon it, had worn a hole.

Brakes Need Watching.

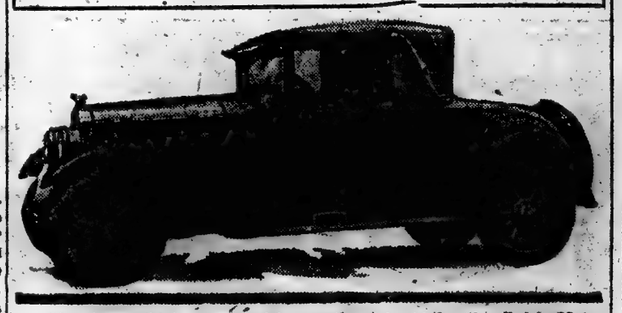
The improvements in brakes demand a little more of the car owner's attention if they are to be enjoyed to the utmost. Now and again the plunger of the hydraulic supply tank should be pulled out and wiped clean with a cloth. This prevents corrosion on the plunger from mixing with the solution and reaching the wheel cylinders, where a perfect piston fit is desirable.

The booster brake now coming into vogue will also need some inspection. The engine's suction is relied upon to produce a vacuum in this device so that the rush of air upon release of the mechanism will provide piston power to aid in the application of the brakes. This suction is taken from the engine manifold and it should be evident that connections should be inspected occasionally. With so many other things operating from the manifold—vacuum system, windshield cleaner, valve lubricators and in some cases crankcase ventilators—it is important to see that there is harmonious action of all these devices so that one will not upset the other.

Motor thermostats should be inspected, cleaned and lubricated each time the cylinder head is removed for carbon and valve work. If this is done the life of the device will be greatly prolonged and the valve should not give trouble.

Do not condemn the new devices if they give trouble. Inspect them occasionally and they will do their important work in a highly satisfactory manner. They are part of the car. Whether a motorist will go right or wrong with them depends largely on the way he is accustomed to treating his car.

BUICK CONVERTIBLE COUPE



The convertible coupe model recently put out by the Buick Motor Company is mounted on the 128-inch chassis, and with its rumble seat provides ample accommodation for four passengers. The body finish is dark blue with black trim. Upholstering is leather, and whipcord material is used for the convertible top.

TROUBLESOME PROBLEMS IN BAY STATE INSURANCE LAW

Rates Too Low, Say Companies, and Accidents "Framed" for Damages May Increase

REPORTS from the leading motor centres of Massachusetts indicate that car owners have been very slow in applying for their new registration numbers under the provisions of the compulsory automobile insurance law, which goes into effect Jan. 1. Under that act the heaviest burden falls upon the insurance companies, as the Motor Vehicle Bureau will not register a car until the owner shows that it has been properly insured and the proper fee paid.

Despite the fact that the cost of insurance in the case of most passenger cars will not be very large, averaging around $30, it is believed that the demands made upon the family exchequers by the holiday season will leave many pocketbooks too flat to permit of insurance payments until about the middle of January. This supposition, if true, will help the insurance companies, as it will delay the rush until a more advantageous time.

While the insurance companies have accepted the law philosophically, they are not in favor of it. This objection is chiefly based upon the rates promulgated by the State Insurance Commissioner and which, from the insurance companies' viewpoint, are considered too low. In fact, one of the largest companies has withdrawn from Massachusetts, leaving more than $500,000 worth of liability automobile insurance for its competitors to take over.

No actuarial experience has been developed to prove the adequacy or inadequacy of the rates, but few insurance officials believe they are sufficiently high to permit them to operate at a profit during 1927. They look forward to an adjustment of rates next year which will allow a fair profit, and there is a hopeful view that this profit will be sufficient to wipe out the expectant 1927 deficit.

The big bugaboo of the insurance companies in Massachusetts is State insurance. They are fearful lest public sentiment, aided by politicians, should force a State fund to reimburse automobile accident victims or their dependents. Strong complaints against the present law, it is felt, would aid in the enactment of a State insurance bill, hence the apparently lethargic attitude of insurance officials.

Veteran claim adjusters see in the law a harvest for accident fakers and unscrupulous attorneys. These men in former days were at a disadvantage. They were very apt to allow themselves to be slightly injured by an automobile owned by a judgment-proof, irresponsible motorist. Hence they usually chose motor cars owned by men with sufficient money to pay a judgment for damages. After Jan. 1 they will not be bothered with choosing their cars. Any motorist with a 1927 license plate will be financially responsible for any personal injuries or deaths he has caused.

How the insurance companies can trip up the accident fakers is problematical. It will be necessary to investigate all claims, but here, too, they will be handicapped. The man who is insured and who has an accident will doubtless fail to obtain witnesses and other information, leaving it to the insurance company.

Despite the fact that the new compulsory law is considered by those who have given it much study a law for the masses, opposition to it exists in certain quarters. Some legislators have voiced their intention of asking a substitute law in the next session of the Legislature.

After next March much more will be known about compulsory insurance than is the case at present. It is an uncharted field. Whether it will work out in practice as well as it has in theory will be shown in the next few months. One fact seems true and that is that the law is imperfect at present inasmuch as it does not "stagger" the load of the insurance companies and the registry officials. It will cause two weeks of confusion annually, with delay, general unpleasantness and inconvenience, and until that feature of the law is remedied many persons will be against it.

MOTOR ADVICE FOR COLD-WEATHER DRIVING

A. H. SARVIS, Service Manager of the Buick Motor Company, has issued the following list of precautions to be taken by car owners to assure the most efficient service during the cold weather:

Flush out the rear axle and the transmission and fill with steam cylinder oil properly thinned with engine oil.

Change oil every 500 miles always, and oftener if necessary.

Flush out the radiator and fill with a solution of fresh water and alcohol sufficiently strong to protect from freezing in the coldest weather expected. Test the solution frequently.

Fully charge the battery. A charged battery will not freeze. Add water when needed just before the car is to be run. Test frequently.

Have the engine thoroughly inspected to assure easy starting and minimum use of the choke. Pay particular attention to the ignition, compression and carburetor adjustment.

It is advisable to carry a set of tire chains and use when needed.

Brakes should be adjusted evenly to prevent skidding on slippery pavements.

LITTLE MARMON READY FOR NATIONAL SHOW

G. M. WILLIAMS, President of the Marmon Motor Car Company, announces that the first formal presentation of the "Little Marmon" will be made at the National Automobile Show in this city beginning Jan. 8. It will be equipped with an eight-cylinder engine.

"The Little Marmon is in no sense a European type of motor car, but has been designed to conform with American standards of beauty, power and comfort," Mr. Williams said. "It retains all of the features of Marmon car construction, yet its size, power and flexibility will make it possible to cope with present-day traffic and road conditions."

CONNECTICUT ROAD WORK

CONTRACTS for road construction and new bridges in Connecticut having a value of $8,684,539 were in various stages of completion on Nov. 15, announces the State Highway Department.

Some of the largest contracts under way are on sections of the Boston Post Road. These include the Orange-West Haven section, practically completed, and a section in Greenwich, which is also nearing completion.

ACTIVITY IN THE MOTOR TRADE

A WHIPPET car driven by "Cannonball" Baker recently completed an economy run from Los Angeles to this city, using 82.25 gallons of gasoline for the trip of 3,559.6 miles, an average of 43.28 miles per gallon. The run was under the direction of the American Automobile Association.

The Studebaker Corporation announces that the first order for the Erskine six car which had its initial showing at the Paris Exhibition was placed by the American Ambassador to Brazil, Edwin V. Morgan. The car will be delivered to him in Brazil.

Nash sales and production established last November surpassed those of that month one year ago. Sales for the first eleven months this year exceed by 45 per cent. the sales for the corresponding period in 1925.

More than 40,000 motorists have taken advantage of the Chevrolet 6 per cent. purchase certificate plan since the inauguration of the idea in 1924, announces the Chevrolet Motor Company.

Engineering work on the new Falcon-Knight six-cylinder chassis to be produced by the Falcon Motors Corporation of Detroit, has been practically completed, announces John A. Nichols Jr., President and General Manager.

The Stutz Motor Car Company of America has adopted a policy of a cost parts list. The publishing of a parts price list based on actual cost to consumers and is available at all times has been an important step in the direction of removing possible misunderstandings in the relationship between branch houses, distributers, dealers and car owners.

Over 13 per cent. of the visitors at the plant of the Cadillac Motor Car Company in Detroit during the past year have been travelers from foreign counntries. Every continent except Africa has been represented, with South America and Europe vying for first place. Germany supplied the greatest number from any individual country and England, New Zealand and France were largely represented.

S. E. Ackerman, for seventeen years connected with the Franklin Automobile Company, and for the last ten years sales manager of that company, has organized a $150,000 distributing company to handle the wholesale and retail sales of Franklin cars in Syracuse and upper New York State.

The Moon Motor Car Company announces a cabriolet roadster of 110-inch wheelbase, which is the latest addition to its light six cylinder line. It has a one-piece swinging type windshield operated mechanically by means of a crank located in the centre of the cowl bar, the centre mechanism being concealed in the cowl bar and front body pillars.

W. R. Bassick, President of the Commerce Motor Truck Company at Ipsilanti, Mich., has, with E. W. Bassick, E. S. Evans and M. H. Furlaud, acquired the capital stock of Service Motors of Wabash, Ind., and the two concerns will be consolidated in the Service plant, where the relay axle drive, which has been used by many trucks and buses during the last year, will be manufactured.

The Republic Motor Truck Company announces two new low-slung six-cylinder trucks, one of one one-half to two tons capacity and the other of two to two and one-half tons. Both have bevel gear axles as standard equipment.

HIGH CITY RECORD FOR MOTOR DEATHS

IN its campaign for street safety, recently inaugurated under the cooperation of the public school system with a series of safety talks in the public schools of all the New York boroughs, the New York Automobile Club has issued a concise and practical code of safety rules for the benefit of motorists and pedestrians. The new code contains ten rules each for motorists, pedestrians and children. For motorists the rules are:

Obey traffic rules, signals and commands of traffic officers.

Go slow passing children or vehicles, around corners, approaching street crossings.

Use tire chains when streets are wet or covered with snow or ice.

Give hand signal when stopping or turning.

Be sure both headlights are lighted at night and properly adjusted.

Never leave automobile unattended without shutting off motor and applying emergency brakes.

When in doubt have automobile under control ready for quick stop.

New York City's record for motor fatalities in 1926 will exceed all previous years, indicating the great need for proper education and doubtless for more stringent regulations. In announcing the official reports of street fatalities, Frederick H. Elliott, the club's director of public safety, states that during the first eleven months of this year 980 persons were killed by motor vehicles in the city, an increase of 40 as compared with the total for 1925. When this month's fatalities are added the total for the year will exceed 1,000, the highest in the city's history.

During the past two months 241 persons were killed by motor vehicles, as compared with 213 during October and November, 1925, an increase of 28. In October there were 104 deaths, as against 101 in October, 1925. Last month showed 137, as against 112 for November a year ago.

The largest increase is in Manhattan, where the fatalities for November totaled 67, an increase of 18 over the preceding month and 16 over November, 1925.

Fatalities to children jumped from 33 in October to 52 in November, an increase of 19, being 16 more than November, 1925, although there was a drop in October last, with only 33 children killed, as compared with 45 in October a year ago.

500-ACRE MODEL FARM BECOMES BOYS' EMPIRE

Leake and Watts Foundation Gives River Tract for Use of High School Agriculturists—Plan Worked Out That Looks Far Into the Future

By WALDO WALKER.

A model 500-acre farm on the Hudson River at Tivoli, N. Y., has been placed at the disposal of the Board of Education by the Leake and Watts Foundation for free use of high school boys who are studying agriculture.

The announcement to this effect last week served to apprise numerous taxpayers for the first time that the Board of Education has for seven years maintained an increasingly flourishing high school course in agriculture. It emphasized that the call of the land is apparently making a growing appeal to boyhood in this, the largest of American cities, and that a worthwhile program is afoot to meet it.

Educators see in the Tivoli farm a twofold importance. They say it widens the fullness of the present-day education offered to the city boy and also envisages the future day when a modern city will be forced to consider food production as something possibly equivalent to a public utility.

Harold G. Campbell, Superintendent of the High School Division, under whose jurisdiction this work falls, was one who saw it in this light. After describing the manifest value of the 500 new river acres for purposes of boy welfare, he said: "New York is already known as the greatest food consumer in the world. We have now taken a decided step in the direction of economic food production."

Mobilizing Food Production.

Mr. Campbell discussed "economic food production" as, in effect, that economic independence in regard to food which a modern city is already forced to attain in regard to its water. He did not risk prediction in literal terms as to what the extent or character of such independence would be, but advanced the definite opinion that it would be some scientific security against the empirical crop program of small farming. He appeared to see that as a city's food production became an increasing problem a city would likely mobilize to meet it from within rather than from without; that more and more it would be required to make control of its food reservoirs a local and, inferentially, a personal responsibility.

George D. Ryan, President of the Board of Education, seemed in accord on this point. "We give no thought," he said, "as to the source of our fruit and cream and cereal at the breakfast table except to enjoy it if it is good and complain to the grocer or milkman if it is not up to high standard. Our noonday lunch is for the most part an incident. At dinner we appreciate the luscious steak, the vegetables and the dessert, but as city people we are unmindful of the thought and energy that have been put into the business of furnishing us with the mere necessities of life.

"As members of the Board of Education, responsible for the education of over a million boys and girls, we should be neglecting our duty if we did not provide opportunities for them to learn of the great problems of food production."

The offer of the Tivoli farm, as accepted by the Board of Education, was summarized by Albert S. McLain, Superintendent of the Leake and Watts Farm School.

"Our interest is entirely in the welfare of boys," he said. "With this in mind, my Board of Trustees has empowered me to place at your disposal all facilities at our Tivoli farm without expense of any kind to the Board of Education of the City of New York."

A Beautiful Location.

The farm lies along a bluff on the east side of the Hudson, overlooking the river. A photographer could make a day of it with the many perspectives of wood and stream. The acreage is restfully diversified with orchards and gardens, pastures and meadows. The buildings include a recreation centre and library, a dining "commons," an attractive schoolhouse and a camp of trim semi-bungalows pleasingly placed in the open under the trees. These "huts" boast screens, canvas storm-curtains and floors. Thickly mattressed spring cots are calculated to induce the sleep proper to a growing boy who has been stretching his muscles all day in the fields.

The facilities to which Mr. McLain referred include a herd of thoroughbred cows, a sheep farm with a flock of 100 wool-bearers, a hog farm stocked with 100 pigs and a poultry plant with 2,000 fowls. There are also a full complement of tractors and agricultural machinery and equipment, a canning factory and a sawmill.

"We will transport the boys from Yonkers to Tivoli," said Mr. McLain in the formal offer, "house them, feed them and return them to Yonkers. They may study the projects we have under way, or they may have the use of the land for special projects. We would only ask that the teacher who supervises these boys when they are distributed among many farmers, supervise them and their work while they are at Tivoli. The Leake and Watts Foundation has nothing to gain except the satisfaction of cooperating with your board in this very necessary type of education."

A Material Saving.

Under State and Federal vocational acts high school boys studying agriculture are required to put in six months of each year on agricultural projects, and their academic work is so arranged that this can be done. Until now the Board of Education in placing its boys on farms for this field work has had to scatter them over as many as six States. The additional supervision this required (for teachers accompany the boys throughout) will now be saved materially, it is pointed out, through the concentration in one place made possible by the Tivoli farm. The constant supervision by teachers is for the purpose of making sure both that the boys are not exploited on the farm and also that they learn.

The development of the high school agricultural course in New York City dates from, and was inspired by, an interesting chapter in war food production in New York State. Because of a shortage of farm help the New York State Boys' Working Reserve was recruited to work idle farms, as one answer to "Food will win the war." More than 18,000 boys volunteered, as well as 1,600 girls. Records of the results of service of 11,151 of those boys, as registered by the farmers for whom they worked, showed that they added 212,000 acres to the food-producing area of the State. This was an average of better than nineteen acres for each young worker. Each received wages, carfare and board. Net earnings for these under-age field "soldiers" were estimated at about $435,000.

Of the 11,000-odd boys, 1,792 came from New York City. This local quota averaged 16.4 acres of production each. The earnings they brought home totaled exactly $64,877.54. A marked demand for a high school course in agriculture began to set in before the armistice, and the Board of Education drew plans to give it a trial in one high school in each of three boroughs—Brooklyn, Queens and the Bronx. But the financial retrenchment forced by the sudden coming of the armistice forced abandonment of the general program.

Dr. James D. Dillingham, Principal of Newtown High School, Queens, had his course organized and progressing, however. By dint of his own efforts, and those of Burton Hayner, his Chairman of the agricultural course at Newtown, Dr. Dillingham kept the course going. Steadily broadened, the Newtown farm course has been under way ever since.

Describing the progress of this work, Superintendent Campbell said that "our greatest worry has always been to find land for practical agricultural purposes. First we cleared a ten-acre plot, with the understanding that we might have the use of it for several years. As soon as this property became attractive it was sold. Next we had a part of the Parental School farm, but the growth of that school made it impossible for us to continue there.

"Then we turned to vacant lots in Queens and interested farmers, who lent us land. The recent real estate boom in that borough put the steam shovel into our crops. We were in distress. The Board of Superintendents recommended the purchase of a farm. But there were no available funds. And now comes this wonderful offer of the Leake and Watts Foundation!"

At the recent luncheon at the Town Hall Club tendered to Mr. McLain Dr. William J. O'Shea, Superintendent of Schools, disclosed that the State agricultural school established in Central Long Island had originally expected an attendance drawn almost exclusively from Nassau and Suffolk counties. After the school had been running a short time it developed that more than 90 per cent. of the students came from New York City.

"It was not strange, therefore," Dr. O'Shea remarked, "that when the request came for agricultural education in our own school system the Board of Education in its wisdom approved of its authorization."

Boys Become Managers.

Superintendent Campbell was asked: Once a city boy received agricultural education in high school, what did he do with it? Many went on to complete their studies at Cornell, he replied. Many cleared direct to the dairy industry. Others went into general and into "city market" farming on Long Island, or entered floriculture there. Landscape gardening, he explained, was one feature of the present course at Newtown.

"Does such study tend to make farm hands or farm owners?" Superintendent Campbell was asked.

"Farm owners and farm managers," he answered.

There is, he said, a growing field for farm managers. The many estates along the Hudson and throughout New York State whose wealthy owners are turning to intensive farming development of their property were given as instances. Not being agriculturists themselves, the owners are increasingly on the lookout for skilled managers.

Mr. Campbell's records show that one Newtown graduate is the specialist in charge of growing Indian plants at the Bronx Botanical Gardens. Another is in charge of the gardens of the American Museum of Natural History. One boy while still in school took charge of a dairy establishment with 100 cows. A Newtown boy who will be graduated next June became a landscape contractor, "on his own" last year, and cleared $700. Before he receives his diploma this year he will clear $1,000.

Mr. Campbell said the "presiding genius" of the present movement in agricultural education here is Frank A. Rexford, who holds the dual position of Supervisor of Civics and Supervisor of Agricultural Education in the Board of Education. Mr. Rexford was Chief Zone Director of the 18,000 youngsters in the New York State Boys' Working Reserve during the war, and had a staff of 250 supervisors under him. He is associated with the National Civic Federation, has been twenty years in the public school system here and has long been active in boy welfare and other public movements.

Mr. McLain came to the Leake and Watts Foundation eight years ago, after long educational service among Southern mountaineers. When he came the Foundation was caring for twenty-eight children until they were 16 years of age. Now he is taking care of 600 and keeps them until they are established in their life work. He has under his charge now more than 100 boys and girls attending high schools or colleges.

CAMP AT THE TIVOLI FARM SCHOOL

BANKER SUMS UP NATION'S GROWTH

Thomas H. Birch Says Industrial Progress of The United States in 150 Years Should Prompt Not Only Pride but Gratitude

THE material and industrial development of the United States during the first 150 years of its existence is summarized in the following article, written by the President of the Trust Company of North America.

By COL. THOMAS H. BIRCH.

FROM the vantage point of the United States Legation at Lisbon, where it was my privilege to serve for ten years as Minister to Portugal, and through intimate association with diplomats and citizens of numerous foreign nations, I acquired an accentuated appreciation of this great country of ours.

And particularly now, on the 150th anniversary of the birth of our nation, one cannot contemplate the United States of America without being staggered by the vastness of its growth and development.

From a humble beginning we have grown until we now have a combined area of 3,743,510 square miles. Our total population exceeds 120,000,000 prosperous, hard-working, contented people.

In natural resources the United States is today the richest country in the world. Its coal, oil, timber and precious metals exist in vast natural stores, and practically every base mineral known to science and commerce is deposited within its boundaries.

Agriculture and Industry.

Although originally an agricultural country, the presence of this tremendous natural heritage of minerals and timber, together with increased "pressure of population on land," has resulted in gigantic industrial development, until today the United States leads the world in commerce and is one of the greatest merchants on the high seas. Its steel, rubber goods, timber, cotton, machinery, foodstuffs and numerous other essential commodities go literally to the ends of the earth.

At present we are producing considerably more than one-half of the main industrial output of the world. With less than 6 per cent. of the world's land area and less than 7 per cent. of the world's population, we are doing more than half of the world's business.

We are producing:

Fifty-five per cent. of the world's iron ore.

Fifty-five per cent. of the world's pig iron.

Sixty-six per cent. of the world's steel.

Sixty-two per cent. of the world's petroleum.

Forty-three per cent. of the world's coal.

Fifty-two per cent. of the world's timber output.

Sixty-five per cent. of the world's naval stores.

Forty-two per cent. of the world's phosphate.

Eighty per cent. of the world's sulphur.

Sixty-two per cent. of the world's lead.

Sixty-four per cent. of the world's zinc.

Sixty per cent. of the world's talc and soapstone.

Forty-five per cent. of the world's barytes.

Fifty-five per cent. of the world's cotton.

In addition to all this we have

Eighty-eight per cent. of all automobiles and motor trucks.

Thirty-four per cent. of the world's railroad mileage.

Financial Standing.

As to our financial position among nations, we have more than half the world's known store of gold.

During the World War and immediately thereafter our financial aid to Europe attained the astounding total of more than $14,000,000,000. Since then we have supplied approximately $4,000,000,000 for the restoration, rehabilitation and development of the devastated areas and industries abroad.

Our contributions to relief funds and philanthropic enterprises throughout the world have been so various and manifold as to be incalculable with accuracy, but may be safely figured in excess of $2,000,000,000. Our charities have not remained at home, but have been universally distributed without regard to race or creed.

To put into cold type even this brief outline of 150 years of progress appears vain-glorious and boastful, but I have been prompted by no such motive. Rather, in our sesquicentennial year, we should combine gratitude with just pride, that as a nation we have been worthy of such achievements. In solemnity and humility may we pledge the United States of America to the continued and ardent promotion of peace and good-will among nations.

TREES IN MINNESOTA ARE TO BE PROTECTED

MINNESOTA, once a great lumber producing State, is the latest Commonwealth to take steps to preserve its remaining stand of timber, as well as to encourage reforestation of cut-over lands. At the recent election the voters approved an amendment to the State Constitution which gives the Legislature the taxing control over timber lands. It is believed this will result in saving much timber from the logger's axe and will likewise encourage lumber companies to reforest lands that have been logged.

Notwithstanding the general impression that Minnesota no longer is an important lumber State, there are still considerable tracts of pine in the northern part of the State and logging operations are carried on every Winter. Several large saw mills are in operation.

BOY SCOUT TRAINING COURSES ARE TO BEGIN NEXT MONTH

Widely Known Educators to Assist in Work of Preparing Executives

THE Boy Scouts of America will soon start its second year of work in training courses for Scout executives, conducted under the advanced educational program. Begun as an experiment in the Scout movement, in connection with a general effort to raise the training standards of the Scout executive corps, this work is believed to have proved its merit already and is assured of continuance. The schools were established largely through the influence of the late James J. Storrow, soon after he became President of the organization.

Six training schools for executives, lasting thirty days each, and similar to those conducted last year, will be carried on at Briarcliff Manor, N. Y. Widely known educators of the country are taking part in the program, together with a number of Scout officials and others engaged in various phases of social work. The first school will start on Jan. 8, and the opening dates of the other five have been arranged for March 5, May 7, June 25, Aug. 20 and Oct. 22.

Work of the Courses.

Each of the courses places major emphasis on training in the technique of the Scout executive's work. The students make up budgets, prepare reports, outline training courses, set up camps, care for office detail, arrange programs, direct activities and are given all sorts of typical problems met with in the Scout executive's job. Some of the educators assisting in the work include Dr. E. K. Fretwell, Dr. William H. Kilpatrick, Dr. C. F. Kulp, Dr. James E. Russell and Charles [illegible] Smith of Columbia University, Dr. [illegible] W. Hetherington, Dr. H. H. [illegible] Dr. Jeremiah W. Jenks, Dr. [illegible] Payne and Dr. J. W. Withers of New York University.

A report upon the activities of the first year of executive training has been made to the Boy Scouts of America by J. P. Freeman, director of the training courses. He points out that the 235 students who were trained last year came from 38 States and 7 foreign countries to attend. Canada, China and Hungary were represented in the student corps. Of those taking the training 152 were high school graduates and 70 were college graduates. Many already had scouting experience, 113 having been Boy Scouts, 45 had reached the grade of Eagle Scout. The average experience represented was five and one-half years of scouting. The majority of graduates of last year's training courses are already at work in various scouting fields.

Three hundred Boy Scouts of St. Louis—because of neatness and efficient records—were selected to act as ushers at the recent Horse Show in that city. Forty were on duty each night and at the Saturday matinee. Four boys were named for each performance to assist the judges in the centre ring. This is the third time St. Louis Scouts have taken part. Their interest in horses and horsemanship is such that last Summer 400 boys at the St. Louis Scout camps were taught to handle horses.

WEAF will broadcast the proceedings of the annual carol service from Grace Church on Christmas Eve, beginning at 7:50 o'clock. The first ten minutes will be occupied with selections of the Grace Church chimes. These will be followed by the carol service under the direction of Clarence Mitchell, choirmaster of the church.

The twenty-fourth annual Christmas midday carol service to take place in St. Paul's Chapel will be broadcast by WEAF, beginning at 12:15 o'clock Friday afternoon. The service will be presented by a mixed choir under the direction of Edmund Jaquas, organist of the church. The first carol to be heard by the radio audience in this service will be "When to Our Lord," by Scosta. During the service a short address will be delivered probably by the Rev. Joseph P. McComas, rector of the church.

The Christmas carol service of Trinity Church will be broadcast by WJZ starting at 2:30 Friday afternoon.

The service is devoted entirely to Christmas music with a brief address to be given by Dr. Caleb R. Stetson, the rector of the church. The full Trinity boy choir will be present, assisted by soloists from many of the prominent churches of the city. An outstanding feature of this broadcast will be the ringing of the famous Trinity Church chimes, which will give a lengthy program of Christmas carols just prior to beginning the period of worship.

***

An entire hour devoted to the singing of Christmas carols will be heard from WJZ, beginning at 10 o'clock Friday night.

***

At 7:30 o'clock on Saturday night the audience of WEAF will hear excerpts from Handel's oratorio, "The Messiah." The soloists who will bring this presentation to the radio audience, with the assistance of a chorus and orchestra, will be Alice Godfilot, soprano; Litta Grimm, contralto; Charles Harrison, tenor, and Wilfred Glenn, baritone.

***

A musical drama entitled "He Looked Like Santa Claus" will be broadcast by WGBS Saturday night at 9:30 o'clock.

This will be followed with "The Processional Hymn," at which time the regular church service will be started.

If Radio Conferees Agree on a Control Bill a Joint Resolution May Be Passed to Stop Further Licensing of Broadcasters—Few Copyright Restrictions on Christmas Music

THE Senate has substituted Senator Gooding (Republican) of Idaho as the third Senate conferee on the radio bill to take the place of the late Senator Cummins of Iowa.

Again indicating an interest in the situation, Senator Borah (Republican) of Idaho has expressed the opinion that in the rush of things in the closing days of the last session of Congress, the Senate did not have a real opportunity to consider the radio bill and therefore that it ought to be brought back for reconsideration. This could only be done on a two-thirds vote of the Senate.

"It may be," Senator Watson (Republican) of Indiana, interjected, "that the bill will come back here by and by on a disagreement."

This assertion, in turn, was taken in some quarters to mean that Mr. Watson expected the conferees might not be able to agree and the whole thing would be thrown back into the Senate. Either of which contingencies, Senator Borah, pressing the matter of reconsideration or the conferees disagreeing, might sound the death knell for legislation this short session. It is recalled, however, that although last year Senator Borah even went so far as to introduce a radio control bill of his own, he was not again heard from during the session on the subject of radio.

It is understood that one of the differences the conferees are endeavoring to reconcile is, if radio is to be controlled by a commission, whether this commission shall spend its full time on the work or be subject to call when there is need for it.

If the conferees agree on a bill it is expected that a joint resolution may be put through cutting off the further licensing of stations until the new radio control body has had a chance to study the situation.

The impresario of a New York station said recently: "Oh! we seldom broadcast 'Valencia' any more except occasionally on an old-time program. We played it once last week and it is scheduled to be played again about a month from now on a request program of old-time favorites.'" This song was introduced on the air last Spring. Yet today it is classed as an old-timer.

Now as Christmas approaches the broadcasters are beginning to play the Christmas music "to death," as they say when they play a popular musical selection more than once or twice a week. But from now until the first of the year the ether will vibrate on almost every wave length with "Silent Night," "Oh, Come, All Ye Faithful" and other selections appropriate to the holiday season. There is no restrictions placed upon this music as there is to protect the musical comedy hits from being worn out by being sent through the microphone too many times. The copyrights have expired on the old selections and the stations are free to radiate them as much as they desire.

McCORMACK ON THE AIR NEW YEAR'S NIGHT

Four operatic and concert artists to be heard on the air New Year's night are:

John McCormack, tenor; Rosa Ponselle, soprano; Mischa Elman, violinist, and Alfred Cortot, pianist. With them will be heard a salon orchestra under the direction of Nathaniel Shilkret.

The program will begin at 9 o'clock, Eastern Standard Time, and will be broadcast simultaneously by WEAF, WJZ, WBZ, KDKA, KYW, WEEI, WJAR, WTAG, WFI, WCAE, WTIC, WGR, WRC, WGN, KSD, WOC, WCCO, WCSH, WDAF, WTAM, WWJ and WHAD. It is possible that others will be added to the list before the program is presented.

Of the four artists on the program, three of them are being heard over the air for the first time. John McCormack has been heard on each of the two previous New Year programs, which ushered in the 1925 and 1926 series, respectively. The coming New Year program marks the radio début of Rosa Ponselle, Elman and Cortot.

Following this New Year's night program, the remaining concerts in the series will be heard on alternate Friday evenings from 9 to 10 o'clock, Eastern Standard Time.

***

Walter Damrosch and the New York Symphony Orchestra will be heard in an "All American" program, Jan. 1, at 9 o'clock, Eastern Standard Time, through WEAF and a chain of associated stations.

YULETIDE SHOPPERS PREFER TONE QUALITY TO DISTANCE

Dealers Say That Higher Priced Sets Are in Demand—Current Supply Devices Are Popular as Gifts This Season

CHRISTMAS this year is bringing to the radio stores thousands of people who are desirous of purchasing receivers and accessories, according to a survey among New York dealers.

"In years past the public wanted a receiver complete with tubes and batteries for about $50. They had no idea of what type set they wanted, until the salesman extolled the virtues of the various makes. Today they know what they want," said J. W. Griffin of Haynes-Griffin, Inc.

"The trend in Christmas buying of sets and accessories," said Mr. Griffin, "seems to be toward the higher grades. People are beginning to take radio seriously. A year or two ago they bought inexpensive equipment of inferior quality, and counted on getting a better set later. Today they want a good instrument, and would rather do without it than take one inferior to what they have in mind. The buyers this season know the names of sets and usually the price. They buy with the knowledge that extras such as tubes and batteries must be purchased separately.

"Conditions change with the times. With consistent advertising of radio the public has been educated to buy according to names.

"Buyers coming into a store today have usually a choice of two sets in mind. They want to hear one and then the other. After a demonstration they ask the salesman a few questions regarding the salient points of the set, its characteristics, quality and adaptability to certain conditions—then make their decision."

Power Operated Sets.

"There seems to be an inclination toward the power operated sets," continued Mr. Griffin. "Few so-called power sets on the market at the present time can really be classed as such. Most manufacturers place a 'B' battery eliminator and storage battery with trickle charger in the cabinet and call it power operated. The public have accepted this as the definition of a power operated set, rather than one which uses a transformer to change the current from alternating to direct by means of plugging it into the house lighting mains.

"The fact that sets are equipped with a 'B' eliminator and trickle charger naturally increases the price. This is a surprise to a customer when he finds that he has to pay approximately 20 per cent. more for a set of this type than one which is operated with batteries.

"Power sets working from the house current also cause some surprise when the price is named. The price level is usually much higher than the customer anticipated, running in the neighborhood of $400. Even at that, they only work in sections of the city where alternating current is supplied. This is one of the reasons that the true power set has not been universally accepted.

"Some people are astounded to find that power sets work on alternating current and not direct current, so that when an occasion of this sort arises there is an immediate call to the company supplying the power and a demand made that the company change the current from direct to alternating, so that they can operate their sets. This, needlessly to say, cannot be done, so the luckless owner of such a set must either change the set or his location. Invariably the set is changed.

"Heretofore the owner of a set who wanted it in a console cabinet usually bought the set and cabinet separately. The manufacturers, noting the trend of public choice, began placing their sets in console cabinets designed especially for the set. This type of receiver is in great demand today.

"There is not the same demand this year for distance-getting sets. People are satisfied with programs of good tonal quality from local stations, and if the set can separate stations they are pleased with the results."

EIFFEL TOWER STATION NOW RULED BY CENSOR

DERIVING part of their incomes from broadcasting commercial publicity, three French radio stations located in Paris—the Eiffel Tower, Radio Paris and P. T. T.—are engaged in a heated controversy with the Minister of Commerce, M. Maurice Bokanowski, regarding his action in appointing a censor for the Eiffel Tower station, according to reports from France.

This special censor has instructions to cut off the transmission when any broadcast is made that might be construed as publicity, thereby causing storms of protest, as in reality the Eiffel Tower station is said to give very little publicity, compared with the other stations.

It is estimated that Radio Paris at the present time is devoting approximately forty minutes during an evening's concert to commercial publicity, radiated at intervals between programs. When announcements begin, publicity is not apparent during the first few sentences, but to the discriminating listener the foundation is soon perceptible, and toward the end of the story comes the name and address of the firm supplying the goods advertised.

So far, apparently, no censorship has been applied to Radio Paris, thereby causing some curiosity and criticism among listeners, who seem to show fixed preferences for one particular station. They take sides in these matters and feel that it is their duty to support the station which they most often patronize.

Station P. T. T., owned by the Postoffice Department, and therefore more closely connected with the Government, also deals in publicity. What puzzles the listeners is why the Government should have taken definite steps against the Eiffel Tower station and apparently ignored the other two stations.

RECEPTION CONDITIONS IDEAL FOR HEARING DISTANT STATIONS

SINCE my report of Dec. 10, in which I reported a total of 292 station heard on my set, I have logged four new transmitters," says a Washington radio fan. "I expect to cross the 300 mark within a few weeks. The new ones are: WKBW, Buffalo; WBAX, Wilkesbarre, Pa.; WWRL, Woodside, and WDWM, Newark. Since Dec. 1, I have had ninety-one stations—that is, different stations, new and old, and the total since early October now stands at 108.

"Last night (Dec. 14) was particularly good for reception, although there has been no complaint to make on any night in December. As for the night of Dec. 5, one of the best for reception I have ever experienced.

W. I. Griffith, Program Director of Radio Station WOI, Iowa State College, Ames, Iowa, writes me under date of Dec. 10:

"We are glad to know that you were able to pick up our program of Dec. 6 so satisfactorily. From the log that you report you were able to get practically everything that was given. This program was received from one coast to the other and including many of the provinces of Canada, some from Alaska and one from the Hawaiian Islands.'

Mr. Griffith is referring to the night of Dec. 5 and the early morning of Dec. 6. His power at WOI, I understand, is 750 watts, yet he was picked up in Hawaii.

"The telegrams read at other stations—night after night—show that listeners are picking up stations thousands of miles away. A striking example is that of a test conducted the night-morning of Dec. 13-14 by KFUL, the new community broadcasting station at Galveston, Texas, which operated on 250 watts, and, although being only low power, was heard in all parts of the country. This station is to operate on 750 watts, but on two tests in the past week, including the one of Dec. 13-14, used only 250 watts. I had it clearly and distinctly on loud speaker with as good volume as many 1,000-watt stations. I heard the announcer read the telegrams from Denver, saying KFUL was 'coming in fine,' and from Monroe, Wash., saying the same thing; also a letter from Brooklyn. Here is a 250-watt station reaching out from Galveston and beyond the Rockies, and to Brooklyn and Washington, D. C., and far enough south to reach out into Central and South America. Apropos this station, here is an interesting study in communication. While listening in the night of Dec. 13-14 I heard the announcer request 'any one in Washington, D. C., hearing' him, to deliver a message to Professor Louis D. Bliss, who had taught him electricity. I had the pleasure of phoning this message the next day to Professor Bliss—a random communication that had come more than a thousand miles through the air and picked up quite by chance."

CHRISTMASTIDE LIFTS SCROOGE INTO THE REALM OF RADIO

"Spirit of the Ether" Shows Dickens's Character How the World's Famous Artists Step Into Millions of Homes

By DR. ALFRED N. GOLDSMITH.

CHRISTMASTIDE of 1926 was approaching. Scrooge's nephew was driving down a business street in his repainted car, dexterously picking his way past the hurrying taxi drivers. On the back seat of the little car was a large package carefully wrapped. Scrooge's nephew had the air of a man well satisfied with himself and looking forward to an especially pleasant reception on his arrival home. And well he might, for he was bringing along a Christmas gift which was sure to please his wife and two youngsters. True, it could not be unpacked and revealed in its polished attractiveness until Christmas Eve. And the first chance to use it, with the children clustering around, their eager eyes and ears wide open, would not come till Christmas morning.

Scrooge's nephew was a radio enthusiast. He had "pottered" with radio for years, and had tried out this and that sort of receiver, ever seeking that elusive article: the "perfect" receiving set. And now he was convinced that he had found it at last in the big radio shop downtown and he was bringing it safely home to his family.

Just then he happened to notice that he was passing the large office building on which was fastened a tarnished brass plate carrying the words: "Scrooge & Marley." "I think I'll drop in on the old boy for a minute and wish him a '"erry Christmas,'" thought his nephew, parking the little car at the nearest side street. After running the gauntlet of a disgruntled-appearing office boy and a secretary with a peculiarly unhappy expression who was just leaving Scrooge's office, he found himself in the dingy room where Scrooge conducted his financial affairs.

"Glad to see you, uncle," said he. "I dropped in to see how you were getting on and to wish you a 'Merry Christmas.'" Scrooge looked at him without enthusiasm and said nothing except, "Hm!" He sat there apparently waiting for something to begin and determined to make no concessions, no matter how little was asked of him.

Not getting much encouragement from this quarter, his nephew remarked: "I came downtown today to do a little Christmas shopping, and decided to get a radio set for the family. I've got a beauty. You should hear the way it brings the world right into the house. We're all going to have a lot of joy out of this Christmas present."

"A radio set! Humbug! Rubbish!" said Scrooge. With increasing indignation he added, "What earthly good will that squawking outfit be to you? In the first place, you can't afford it." Scrooge's nephew flushed a little at that, although, as a matter of fact, he could afford it.

Scrooge ran on: "Here you are, buying the thing for Christmas and it's sure to be out of date by New Year's. They invent some sort of a new circuit or whatever you call it and tell the public all about it, and then your radio gadget isn't any use at all and you have to get rid of it."

His nephew certainly didn't seem to agree. "I don't see how you make that out, uncle," he said in a remonstrating tone. "As a matter of fact these receivers seem to be useful for years and years, longer than the average automobile. I am quite certain that this radio outfit will outlive my car. Why, one of the biggest radio companies in the country has had its receivers of the present type on the market well over a year, and isn't announcing any changes. In most businesses the fashions don't last that long."

Scrooge found no answer. But he didn't like his nephew any the better for flooring him in an argument. In an increasingly bitter tone he remarked, almost with a snarl, "And what good is the thing when you have it? You never hear anything worth while. Just cheap music from still cheaper places. And who listens to it, anyhow? Or gets any pleasure out of it? It's ridiculous for you to waste your money on such a thing. Bah!" And with this final snort Scrooge dismissed the subject and his nephew at the same time.

Christmas Eve Arrived.

It was Christmas Eve. Scrooge's lonely quarters were lonelier than ever. He sat there in a corner by himself in the silence of his dismal room, thinking, thinking. But he got scant comfort out of that. The monotonous tick of the clock and the occasional rumble of a passing car were the only sounds that broke the bleak and dismal monotony. He began to wonder whether living as he did, so coldly and altogether by himself, was a good idea. Somehow it didn't seem to be that evening.

And from this his thoughts drifted to his cheery, rosy-cheeked nephew, and the conversation he had had with him; and then he remembered the radio set. Somehow he wasn't so sure that one of those things in his room wouldn't have helped that evening. As it was, there was nothing to do but lean back in his chair and doze a little before going to bed. And so, from gently dozing, he went further into the dark shadows of slumber.

With a start, Scrooge found himself walking along a spotlessly clean aisle, in what seemed to be a large hospital ward. By his side strode a figure that fairly sparkled and glinted as innumerable little flashes of light burst from it, from the tips of its toes to the top of its head. A queer, scintillating figure, not quite human, and yet full of cheerful power. Even without being told, Scrooge somehow knew that the "Spirit of Radio" was walking along beside him.

They passed into a room at one side where lay a woman, obviously in great pain, and yet courageously refusing to be discouraged. A nurse came into the room at that moment. She walked past Scrooge and his guide without seeming to see them. She pressed a tiny button on the receiver standing on the table next to the bedside, and the voice of a great singer softly filled the room. The lines of pain on the woman's forehead were smoothed out, and hope glowed again on her wasted features. Scrooge understood all this. He hadn't been any too well himself during the last few months.

There was a moment of darkness, a sense of swift flight, and Scrooge found himself in a different place. It was the kitchen of a little farmhouse somewhere out on the distant hills, and the night wind was shrilly whistling past, trying its best to find a way into the room through even the tiniest crevice in the walls. By the fireside, in a wheel-chair, sat an old man. It was quite clear that he wasn't going to take any long walks that evening. Nor perhaps, any evening, for that matter. Scrooge suddenly realized, though he never could tell how, that he was facing one of the men who, living far out on a lonely farm, had reached nearly the end of the span of life, and who could no longer fare again into the world, but must remain chained to the hearth.

But the old gentleman didn't seem to be particularly worried. He was beating time to a lively melody that was echoing around the room and drowning the hostile sounds of the night outside.

The Spirit of Radio at Scrooge's side pointed an accusing finger at him. "So you think radio is a humbug?" remarked the Spirit in a pleasant voice, but with a faint tone of mockery. And then came silence and darkness again for a moment.

Scrooge was sure he was in the worst part of whatever little town it happened to be. Nowhere else would so many people be crowded into one small room. And nowhere else would the plaster be peeling from all over the walls and the broken window panes be stuffed with so many bits of paper to keep out the night air. There were three men sitting at a table talking, while near them sat their wives and small children, who had been brought along on this Christman Eve visit. "Rather strange-looking people," thought Scrooge. "They look to me like people who don't amount to much in the world. Here, at any rate, they won't get much from radio." He turned toward his guide with an air of triumph. But his guide didn't seem to be at all discouraged.

Just then there burst into the room a boy of twelve or so. "I've got the new tube!" he yelled, with an air of having found a large diamond or something better. Rushing over to a ramshackle radio receiver, perched precariously on a shelf at the side of the room, he made some rapid motions and turned a handle. The babble in the room stopped short. For floating in the air of that hovel among those unturored but music-loving folk were the throbbing strains of a great orchestra playing the climax of one of the acts of a well-beloved opera. The human message of it carried through poverty, through ignorance, through every human obstacle, straight to the hearts of the listeners.

Scrooge felt that. He couldn't help feeling it. His look of triumph faded and was replaced by an humble expression of understanding. He turned to the Spirit of Radio and said, "I never dreamed that radio meant so much to so many people, or could do such wonderful things." His guide smiled and said: "You little know what it can do even now. Wide as the world, broad as music itself, it is the supreme message from man to man." And then the scene faded.

Scrooge Awakes.

With a start, Scrooge shook himself. He was still in the rickety old chair in his sitting room, and the room had grown colder than ever. "I've got to find out all about radio sets tomorrow morning," thought Scrooge, as he contemplated the dismal hours ahead of him before slumber-time that evening.

The next morning, bright and early, he called on his nephew. He was just in time to see the new set fairly launched into the sea of radio. Pealing out of the loud speaker came the chimes of a famous Christmas carol. Grouped around it, their chubby faces alight with interest and excitement, were his nephew's children.

With a sheepish expression, but with a brave tone nevertheless, Scrooge said: "I have been thinking over what you said to me the other day about the advantages of having a radio set. I believe now that it will last past New Year's. But even if it didn't, I know I can find a real use for it during the next week. Is the one you have there a good one, and should I get one like it?"

"It's a fine one," said his nephew. "Why, you couldn't do better than to get a duplicate of it, and I know you will like it, uncle. In the meantime call here as often as you please and listen to our evening entertainments. You see," he added, with a smile, "we have our own little private entertainments at home now, and you'd be astonished at the way the great artists and interesting people of the world march through our room whenever I touch the button. They'll do the same for you." And they did.

WWJ BACK ON THE AIR.

After an absence of more than a week from the air, WWJ, Detroit, has resumed operations, using new towers. From reports received, the station has been heard in many locations with better volume than heretofore.

FOREIGN LISTENERS ASK FOR A TUNING NOTE

BROADCASTING engineers in Europe are striving to evolve a characteristic tuning note for the various stations, so that listeners can judge the capabilities of their sets by a standard signal.

One suggestion made to the British Broadcasting Company is for a pianist at stated times to send out tones of uniform strength.

Several German stations use gongs for this purpose, but the British engineers are experimenting with a more elaborate system involving tuning forks. If adopted this would entail the use of electrically controlled tuning forks, which would first sound all the notes of the scale simultaneously, and then each note separately up the scale.

AIR CONDITIONS GOOD IN HARRISBURG, PA.

RADIO listeners in Harrisburg, Pa., are enjoying good reception this season, according to a report received this week from an enthusiast in that city, who said: "A Washington (D. C.) radio fan was reported in a recent issue of THE TIMES Radio Section as saying that he reached California one time this year and that Nov. 27 was a night for fine reception. So it was. But there were several other good nights.

"You can say with every degree of accuracy that Harrisburg (Pa.) fans have been getting California intermittently since Oct. 6, and that one fan reported having it sixteen times already this season, using a super-heterodyne with inside loop. The City Clerk of Harrisburg picked up KFI on a two-tube homemade set, using only head phones, however. KFI, KPO, and KGO have been reported here a number of times.

"Dec. 7 was a real night for Harrisburg, one fan reporting reception from forty-three stations—all on loud-speaker. KFI had Paul Roberts singing the "Love Nest" and an orchestra number was the "Indian Love Call." The forty-three stations spread from WBZ, Springfield, to KFI, Los Angeles, and from CKCL, Toronto, to the municipal station at KFUL, Galveston, Texas, and WSMB, New Orleans."

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

By ORRIN E. DUNLAP Jr.

QUESTION—In the Questions and Answers column several weeks ago I noticed that a radio fan asked about station CYJ, in Mexico City, which signed off with an announcement regarding the General Electric Company. The answer to the question said that the General Electric Company reported that it knew of no such station in Mexico and that it did not operate it. I have since heard that station, and clearly picked up the name "General Electric" and the call CYJ. I am wondering whether or not you have any further information on this broadcaster, because it is certainly on the air.—J. L. Answer—A verification card of reception was submitted by a radio listener in Atlantic City last week which read as follows: "Mexico, CYJ, The General Electric, S. A., desires to thank you for your kind comments on its radio program and hopes you will like future programs. Transmissions will take place every day except Sundays, at 10 P. M., Eastern Standard Time." The "S. A." does not stand for South America but for Sociedad Antonia. The station is owned and operated by the General Electric Company of Mexico. The wave length is 410 meters.

Question—The set in question is a five-tube neutrodyne, 1925 model; the aerial an indoor tape. While range, volume and quality are fine, all things considered, the selectivity is poor. I inquired at several radio shops as to the possibility of using a "wave trap" but was told they were of little or no value when used in connection with an aerial such as I have. Is this true? (2) Is there anything I can do or buy that will at least improve it not entirely overcome this annoying fault? —A. S. W. Answer—The results obtained by a wave trap differ with each set and with conditions of reception, so that the only way to determine its effectiveness is to actually try it in connection with the set. The fact that the antenna is indoors does not necessarily mean that the trap will not be effective. (2) Shortening the antenna might help.

Question—Where is station KOIL?—I. K. Answer—Council Bluffs, Iowa.

Question—My Radiola 25 (six tubes) gets the following stations with ease, but outside of these stations I cannot get results: WEAF, WJZ, WOR, WNYC, WJR, WRNY, WEBJ, WGBS, KDKA, WAHG, WGY, WNJ and WHAP. Am enclosing a diagram of my location; do you think this has anything to do with poor reception? Should not this set get further distance than Detroit from where I am located here in Mount Vernon? Batteries and tubes are all in A1 condition. Answer—The four power lines of 11,000 volts each and the four power lines of 8,000 volts each running not more than 400 feet from your house are undoubtedly the cause of not hearing many distant stations. Such a network of wire serves as a shield and absorber of the radio energy.

Question—Recently our city installed a fire alarm system which has interfered greatly with radio reception in the vicinity of the City Hall, where the plant is located. The trouble evidently is in the electric generator, which is a shunt wound Type SD 250 volts, one ampere B-17½-RPM-1725, regulated by resistance; charging rate is 8-10ths ampere. Can such trouble be remedied?—A. E. B. Answer—The best plan would be to take the matter up with the engineer who installed the system, as he will be thoroughly acquainted with the apparatus and will undoubtedly know what to do to stop the interference. The Department of Marine and Fisheries, Ottawa, Ont., has issued a pamphlet regarding the elimination of various electrical interferences that might contain some helpful suggestions which could be applied to this case. It deals in detail with electric signs and motors and generators.

Question—I appeal to you for information of some sort. I have a Crosley 5-38, new in April, 1926, and all Summer long it gave me wonderful results in selectivity, volume and distance, but since about the middle of September there has been an annoyance within the set that I cannot account for. The best I can describe it is as though some one had laid a piece of writing paper across the strings of a grand piano and when the instrument was played the paper would vibrate. It is particularly noticeable in piano music, although any music, if brought up to proper volume, "rattles" in the same manner and the voice of the announcers and speakers appear to have "a loose wire" somewhere. Now the trouble is not in the speaker, as the same noise is in the earphones and in two other speakers which I have tried. It is not in my "B" eliminator, as I have tried batteries with the same result. It is not in the tubes, as I tried five tubes just out of stock with the same annoying result, and another set of the same type and manufacture connected to my aerial and ground, using my batteries and tubes and eliminator, my speaker, and operating in the same room on the same evening did not produce the aforementioned rattle. I will appreciate it if you can give me some hint as to where to look for the trouble, or if you can give me the address of some place where the trouble can be found and remedied. I have tried all connections and find them intact; the transformers test out perfectly—earphone test—and when I made the test with the other set of the same make and type I was careful to even use the same grid leak, which is 2 megohms capacity. I am at the end of my string.—F. N. Answer—Test all fixed condensers, especially the grid condenser. Be absolutely sure that both the audio transformers are O. K. The earphone-battery test when applied to transformers is sometimes misleading. Test the primary of the audio transformer.

Question—I have a five-tube neutrodyne set. I get stations whose waves are more than 400 meters very good, but below WHN the signals are not very loud. Would a power tube increase the volume of these stations? (2) Would any change of wiring be necessary? I am using a 90-volt "B" battery and 4½-volt "C."—E. C. P. Answer—Shorten the antenna and the set will tune more efficiently on the shorter waves. A power tube would increase the volume of all signals proportionally, but would not favor those below 400 meters more than stations above that wave. (2) No change in wiring is necessary except that an extra "C" battery must be inserted on the last audio stage where the power tube is used. The "B" battery voltage must be increased to 135 volts, as an extra 45-volt unit is required by the power tube.

Question—I have a one-tube reflex receiver equipped with a crystal detector. Lately the music has been louder when the wire is pushed off the surface of the mineral. How can the set function if the detector is not working?—N. K. S. Answer—The vacuum tube acts as the detector. The crystal is probably worn out.

Question—Why is it that a good neutrodyne set, which gives excellent results in reception of the broadcasting stations, will not tune in wave lengths below 100 meters?—H. D. P. Answer—The coils, condensers and wiring of the circuit are not designed to tune in short waves.

PORTABLE DIRECTION FINDER COVERS FROM 39 TO 3,300 METERS

Engineer at Bureau of Standards Laboratory Develops New Device Tuned by One Control —Novel Features of the Coils

THE radio increase in the range of wave lengths used for radio transmission purposes has created the need for a direction finder which will function over a wide band of frequencies and yet be portable and simple to operate. To meet this requirement such a finder has been developed by F. W. Dunmore of the Bureau of Standards which operates over the band from 3,300 to 39 meters.

In Mr Dunmore's finder a shielding aluminum box contains all the receiving apparatus, including batteries, with the exception of the direction-finder coil which is supported on a bakelite shaft extending through the box and rotated by means of a hand-wheel under the box.

The direction finder is of the simple rotating-coil type. Automatic features are provided so that only a single tuning and a single balancing control are used. The receiving set is a super-heterodyne which employs a standard Signal Corps amplifier and reduces the controls to a single one by mounting the main tuning condenser and the heterodyne generator tuning condenser on the same shaft. The latter condenser has connected in parallel with it an auxiliary condenser of slightly smaller capacity operated by means of a cam which may be slipped on the shaft carrying the two tuning condensers.

The wide wave range is made possible by a set of seven interchangeable plug-in direction-finder coils, each with a corresponding heterodyne generator coil and a cam for operating the auxiliary tuning condenser. Another automatic condenser is connected in parallel with the main tuning condenser. Its function is to compensate for the detuning effect produced at the higher frequencies when the balancing condenser is operated. The center of each direction-finder coil is grounded to the shield when in use. A small telescoping brass rod extending vertically through the centre of each direction-finder coil, connected to the movable plates of the balancing condenser, serves as an auxiliary antenna for the purpose of sharpening the point of minimum signal.

BEACONS SUCCESSFUL ON THE GREAT LAKES

THIS is the first full season that the radio-beacon system has been in operation on the Great Lakes. Although one station in the lakes was established in June, 1925, the remainder of the seven stations now in operation were placed in commission near the end of the last season of navigation. Reports recently received by the United States Lighthouse Service indicate quite extensive use of this system already in lake navigation. Many vessels have been equipped with radio compasses to make use of these bearings. Calculations covering only eighteen of the ships so equipped give a record of 665 bearings taken and recorded. Of the bearings completed 80 per cent. are marked as true or correct to one degree or less. Only 10 per cent. are reported as in error more than two degrees.

As most of the radio compasses have been installed during the past season, the greater part of these bearings have been taken by ships' officers sailing with these instruments for the first time. The average distance over which the bearings were taken was sixty-one miles.

The radio-beacon stations now in operation on the Great Lakes are: Devils Island, Wis.; Manitou Island, Mich.; Whitefish Point, Mich.; Detour Lighthouse, Mich.; Lake Huron Lightship; Detroit River Lighthouse, Mich., and Buffalo Lighthouse, New York. Additional stations are provided for or under construction at Passage Island, Mich.; Lansing Shoal Lightship, Mich.; Pointe Betsie, Mich.; Milwaukee Breakwater, Wis., and Thunder Bay Island, Mich.

It is expected that a radio beacon will be in operation next season at the new Canadian Lighthouse on Southcast Shoal, Lake Erie.

MODERN EQUIPMENT FOR COAST GUARD

Rear Admiral Frederick C. Billard reports gratifying results have been obtained by the modernization of the Coast Guard radio equipment. Up-to-date radio apparatus has been designed and plans are under way for placing it aboard ships as rapidly as possible. The installation of radio equipment commenced last year on the patrol boats, which make life miserable for rum-runners, has been completed.

"In order to keep pace with the fast-growing radio art and at the same time increase the usefulness and efficiency of the International Ice Patrol Service," Rear Admiral Billard said, "radio apparatus, employing high frequencies and comparatively low power, was installed on the vessels assigned to that duty. Results were very gratifying.

"Radio communication was maintained daily during the season with Washington direct, a distance of 2,400 miles, instead of the former practice of relaying through land radio stations and thence to Washington over land wires."

The need for rapid communication has necessitated the equipping of 273 Coast Guard ships with radio and the establishing of 23 stations for handling ship-to-shore messages.

BIBLICAL DRAMA.

"The Guest of the Shepherds," a biblical drama, will be broadcast tonight at 10:15 o'clock through WEAF. The story is told in the second chapter of Luke, verses 8 and 9, and relates to the watching shepherds and the appearance of the angels with the glad tidings.

Dear Sirs.

Inclosed you will find a list of seventy five (75) radio stations which were received on the Freshman Masterpiece during Monday night November twenty second. This list has the time each was received and also what each had at that time. You will notice that there are only six Chicago stations and we are only one hundred fifty miles from there. The radio we have is on it's third year of service and still giving good programs very clear. Serial number of the set is A 7403.

Wishing you success in every way.

CLUSTER OF SEVEN LIGHTS BASIS OF NEW TELEVISOR

Dr. E. F. W. Alexanderson Introduces Improved Method of Sending Pictures and Seeing Moving Objects by Means of Radio

A TELEVISION projector based upon a revolving drum carrying twenty-four mirrors which throw a cluster of light beams on a screen was described by Dr. E. F. W. Alexanderson, consulting engineer of the General Electric Company, at a meeting of the St. Louis section of the American Institute of Electrical Engineers on Wednesday.

Dr. Alexanderson, who has devoted a great deal of time to telephotography and television, said: "Our work has already proved that the expectation of television is not unreasonable, and it may be accomplished with means that are in our possession at the present day. How long it will take us to attain practical television I do not venture to say."

Radio transmission of a single photograph has been accomplished by Alexanderson in two minutes in his research laboratory at Schenectady. He explained that television requires the transmission, reception and reproduction of a single picture in one-sixteenth of a second. One of the fundamental difficulties in the way of a speed of sixteen pictures per second is the development of a projector which will enable any one to see on a screen the movement of objects miles away.

Dr. Alexanderson described the television projector which he now has in operation in his laboratory and by means of which he is hopeful of getting the 300,000 brush strokes per second that are necessary for producing motion pictures.

"It is easy enough to design a television system with something like 40,000 picture units per second," stated Dr. Alexanderson, "but the images so obtained are so crude that they would have no practical value. Our work in radio photography has shown us that an operating speed of 300,000 picture units per second will be needed to give pleasing results. This speeding up of the process is unfortunately one of those cases where the difficulties increase by the square of the speed."

Lights Paint Pictures.

The method which has been devised by Dr. Alexanderson to speed up the process of moving mechanical parts is the use of seven distinct light sources, the lights converging in a cluster of brilliant lights which scan the picture, each light painting a crude picture, but all seven interlacing optically to produce a single good picture.

The model of the television projector used by Dr. Alexanderson consists of seven light sources converged by an optical system to a revolving drum carrying twenty-four mirrors. These mirrors reflect the light cluster to a screen. Using seven lights instead of one, the useful illumination is increased forty-nine times. Furthermore, in using seven light beams in multiple, the speed at which each light beam must travel has been reduced at a rate of seven to one. In addition to these advantages for multiple light beam operation, each beam needs to move only one-seventh as fast, and therefore needs to give only 43,000 instead of 300,000 independent impressions per second. A modulation speed of 43,000 per second is high with the present radio practice, but is yet within reason, being only ten times as fast as is used in broadcasting, according to Dr. Alexanderson.

In his plan a complete television system requires an independent control of the seven light pots. For this purpose seven photo-electric cells are located in a cluster at the transmitting machine and control a multiplex radio system with seven channels. A Hammond multiplex system may be used with seven intermediate carrier waves which are scrambled and sent out by a single transmitter, and then unscrambled at the receiving station, so that each controls one of the seven light beams.

Dr. Alexanderson, in discussing radio photography, showed some of the results he had obtained in the radio transmission of pictures, using both the modulated and interrupted signal. Under the former system any broadcasting station can transmit photographs for distances as great as music of good quality can be transmitted by that station. For long-distance transmission the short-wave telegraphic system may be used. Reception of pictures by telegraphy is independent of signal strength. Thus if the signal is strong enough to be recorded at all, it gives the same kind of records at the maximum as at the minimum signal intensity. This makes the recording independent of fading. If, furthermore, the signals are stronger than the prevailing static, it is possible to eliminate the effects of static by introducing a threshold value of signal strength in the receiver, and nothing is received unless the signal exceeds this value.

Overcoming Static and Fading.

"Radio has up to the present developed two distinct methods of signaling—by modulation and by interruption. The first is usually associated with broadcasting and the second with telegraphy. Both of these methods of signaling may be adapted to radio photography, and each will have its distinct field. The effective range of a broadcast station is much shorter than a telegraph station of the same power, but within this range it gives a service of excellent quality," said Dr. Alexanderson. "It is therefore possible that a picture service may be given by these same stations which will be of the same standard of quality as the musical entertainments. Freedom from disturbances is insured by having a large number of station interlinked by a wire system, so that a good selection of entertainment is available in all parts of the country. Thus the broadcasting machinery is now available, should the public become interested in radio photography for entertainment or otherwise.

"Half-tone effects are produced by dividing up the picture in five or more separate shades, such as white, light gray, medium gray, dark gray and black. The transmitting and receiving machines analyze and reassemble these shades automatically. Various methods may be worked out for translating light intensities into radio signals. One method would be to use five wave lengths, one for each shade. The pictures that are shown here have, however, been made by a process utilizing a single wave length.

Machine Selects Various Shades.

"The transmitting machine is made in such a way that it automatically at every moment selects the shade that comes nearest to one of the five shades, and sends out a telegraphic signal which selects the corresponding shade in the receiving machine. This sounds perhaps more complicated than it really is, because the telegraphic code by which different shades are selected depends upon the synchronization of the two machines, which is necessary under all circumstances. Thus black in the picture is produced by exposure of the sensitive paper to the recording light spot during four successive revolutions, whereas light gray is produced by a single exposure during one of the four revolutions and no exposure for the three succeeding revolutions. The overlapping exposure is progressive and the whole works as a continuous process," said Dr. Alexanderson.

"The television projector consists of a source of light, a lens and a drum carrying a number of mirrors. When the drum is stationary a spot of light is focused on the screen. This spot of light is the brush that paints the picture. When the drum revolves the spot of light passes across the screen. Then as a new mirror, which is set at a slightly different angle, comes into line the light spot passes over the screen again on a track adjacent to the first, and so on until the whole screen is covered. If we expect to paint a light picture of fair quality, the least that we can be satisfied with is 10,000 separate strokes of the brush. This may mean that the spot of light should pass over the screen in 100 parallel paths, and that it should be capable of making 100 separate impressions of light and darkness in each path. If we now repeat this process of painting the picture over and over again sixteen times in a second, it means that we require 160,000 independent strokes of the brush of light in one second. To work at such a speed seems at first inconceivable; moreover, a good picture requires really a scanning process with more than 100 lines. This brings the speed requirements up to something like 300,000 picture units per second.

Brilliant Light Is Used.

"Besides having the theoretical possibility of employing waves capable of high speed of signaling, we must have a light of such brilliancy that it will illuminate the screen effectively, although it stays in one spot only one-three hundred-thousandths of a second. This was one of the serious difficulties, because even if we take the most brilliant arc light we know of, and no matter how we design the optical system, we cannot figure out sufficient brilliancy to illuminate a large screen with a single spot of light. The model television projector was built in order to study this problem and to demonstrate the practicability of a new system which promises to give a solution to this difficulty.

"The result of this study is briefly that, if we employ seven spots of light instead of one, we will get forty-nine times as much useful illumination. Offhand, it is not so easy to see why we gain in light by the square of the number of light spots used, but this can be explained with reference to the model. The drum has twenty-four mirrors, and in one revolution of the drum one light spot passes over the screen twenty-four times; and when we use seven sources of light and seven light spots we have a total of 170 light spot passages over the screen during one revolution of the drum.

"Tests have been made with this model television projector to demonstrate the method of scanning the screen with seven beams of light working in parallel simultaneously," said Dr. Alexanderson. "The seven spots of light may be seen on the screen as a cluster. When the drum is revolved these light spots trace seven lines on the screen simultaneously, and then pass over another adjacent track of seven lines until the whole screen is covered. A complete television system requires an independent control of the seven light spots. For this purpose seven photo-electric cells are located in a cluster at the transmitting machine and control a multiplex radio system with seven channels.

"Seven television carrier waves may thus be spaced 100 kilocycles apart, and a complete television wave band should be 700 kilocycles wide. Such a radio channel might occupy the waves between 20 and 21 meters. If such use of this wave band will enable us to see across the ocean I think all will agree that this space in the ether is assigned for a good and worthy purpose."

OBSERVATIONS SHOW RECEPTION IMPROVED

RADIO reception has improved during the last two months and conditions generally are vastly better than during the similar period of a year ago, according to A. R. McEwan, Director of Radio, Canadian National Railways.

"We are well equipped for radio observations," said Mr. McEwan, "because there are in daily operation over our system from the Atlantic to the Pacific and across the international border some fifty cars equipped with receiving sets in charge of competent operators, each of whom keeps a log of his run.

"As the apparatus is standardized and the train operating range is from tidewater to tidewater, a distance of 3,700 miles, the monthly charts prepared from the information are exceedingly valuable and informative There has been a general upward curve in reception from coast to coast, showing good results from morning hours until after midnight.

"Only one period shows any exception, and that refers to a fortnight during October when atmospheric disturbances were accompanied by gorgeous displays of Aurora Borealis, rendering reception impossible on the occasion.

"There has been considerable improvement in broadcasting, a matter in which the Canadian National Railways radio department is deeply interested, as the organization operates ten stations, ranging from Moncton, in New Brunswick, to Vancouver, in British Columbia. Records show excellent reception on both sides of the boundary line, with radiation across both the Atlantic and Pacific, to Europe and the isles of the great western ocean and up within the confines of the great northland known as the Northwest Territories of Canada."

5 STATIONS FOR NEWARK.

Another broadcasting station will open in the near future in New Jersey, according to an announcement made by the Radio Industries Broadcast Company of Newark, who have obtained permission to broadcast on a wave length of 280.2 meters, using the call letters WDWM.

The transmitting apparatus will be of the latest Western Electric design with an output of 500 watts. This makes the fifth station to be operating in Newark, the others being WOR, WAAM, WNJ and WGCP.

STUDENTS TOLD THAT RADIO IS UNLIMITED RESEARCH FIELD

Broadcast Official Says New Problems Crop Up Daily—Short Waves Hold Many Scientific Secrets and Mysteries

YOUNG men training for the radio engineering profession need not weep, as did Alexander, because there were no more worlds to conquer, according to David Sarnoff, Vice President of the Radio Corporation of America, in a talk to the students of St. Lawrence University.

"It is true that the building of a transmitting or broadcasting station and the construction of a radio receiving set have become matters of practical engineering and precise manufacture," said Mr. Sarnoff. "We also know that electrical energy generated at a given frequency can be radiated in the form of electrical waves which travel in every direction. We know, too, some of the laws that govern the effective detection and utilization of such electrical signals, and we have developed methods of amplifying these signals till they reach an audibility satisfactory to the human ear.

Ether's Laws a Puzzle.

"But of the laws that govern the propagation of electro-magnetic waves over the earth and through the air we know little. In this field we encounter a bewildering haze of theory. Much further scientific investigation is required before the problems will be solved.

"We know that with the same given power at the transmitting station we can cover greater distance over salt water than we can over land; we can in general cover greater distance over flat land than over hilly country, over moist land than dry land. We have noted the absorption of wave energy by mineral deposits in the earth. But the fact remains that our understanding of the physical phenomena involved has made comparatively little advance over the theories formulated by Faraday and Maxwell. The field for exploration there is as wide as the art of radio itself.

"We are just beginning to glimpse the possibilities of short-wave transmission—that is, transmission with wave lengths of 100 meters or less. But here again we are faced with puzzling phenomena. We find, in some instances, that reception is good at a point 2,000 miles from the transmitter and very poor at a distance of 200 miles. We are able to cover extraordinary ranges with low-power short-wave transmission, but often are unable to communicate over comparatively short distances. We find, in other cases, that to cover distance in a given direction one wave length must be used, and to cover an equal distance in another direction a different wave length is required. A wave length which gives excellent results in long-distance daylight transmission does not always give the same results in transmission after dark.

Static a Bugbear.

"The great technical problems of radio communication are static, interference and fading. We have discovered many palliatives for these ills but no cures," continued Mr. Sarnoff.

"Beyond the highly selective methods of reception already adopted, one of the greatest hopes of solving the problem of interference, that jumble of transmission between signals from different stations, lies in the further exploration of short-wave transmission. Short wave lengths promise to open up not only new paths for wave propagation, but a large number of useful communication channels. Consider that almost all the long-wave transoceanic telegraph stations in the world are crowded into a frequency band about 15,000 cycles wide, whereas the available short-wave field below 100 meters includes approximately 30,000,000 cycles, and you will have some indication what the future may bring forth in the way of additional radio communication facilities.

"More fundamental discoveries with regard to the handling of light waves and electro-magnetic waves must be made before television, the art of transmitting instantaneously changing scenes and moving objects, can be consicered an accomplished fact. The vista which such a period of radio transmission would open up, especially in the realm of higher education, is inspiring indeed. To the power of exposition now inherent in sound broadcasting would be added the power of demonstration made possible by the broadcasting of sight.

"The application of radio to the phonograph industry, as well as the application of some of its principles to other industrial purposes, opens an almost limitless field to the electrical engineer.

"In fact, from whatever angle radio is viewed, the great oppportunities are before, not behind. It has created a multitude of new problems which cry to be led out of the wilderness."

FOREIGN STATIONS USING NEW WAVES

A COMPLETE change of wave lengths has been established throughout European broadcasting stations to eliminate interference. Although it is too early to express any definite opinion as to the effect of the change, the British Broadcasting Company believes that the experiment has produced successful results, especially in eliminating heat-note whistles.

During the early part of the experiment a slight heterodyne was heard on 2LO's wave, which was traced to Leipsic, operating on about 359 meters instead of 357.1, the new wave assigned to it. The trouble was remedied. The signals from 5XX Daventry, are reported to be much clearer in the London district.

London, 2LO, 361.4 meters.
Daventry, 5XX, 1,600 meters.
Aberdeen, 2BD, 495.8 meters.
Belfast, 2BE, 306.1 meters.

'TALES OF HOFFMANN' ON THE AIR THROUGH 8 STATIONS TOMORROW

THE WEAF Grand Opera Company will present "Tales of Hoffmann" tomorrow night at 10 o'clock, Eastern Standard Time, for the audiences of WEAF, WJAR, WLIT, WRC, WDAF, WCSH, WSAI and KSD.

"Tales of Hoffmann" is a fantastic opera consisting of three acts composed by Jacques Offenbach, and is acknowledged to be the masterpiece of this composer. It was composed during the Summer of 1880, but Offenbach died before its first performance, which was given in the Opéra Comique, in Paris, February, 1881. The libretto was written by Jules Barbier and was founded on three tales of the gifted writer E. Th. A. Hoffmann.

The first act really serves as a prologue to the opera and shows a scene in a tavern with students drinking. Hoffmann, the hero of the opera, is singing for their entertainment, and sings of three of his peculiar adventures. The first of these shows Hoffmann as a pupil in the house of Spalanzani, a famous scientist. While there he falls in love with Olympia, who he believes is Spalanzani's daughter. Olympia, however, is a mere automaton made by the scientist, and could talk, sing and dance like a human being. Hoffmann's first bitter adventure ends when the doll is broken to bits.

The second of his peculiar tales shifts the scene to Venice and deals with Giulietta, who is a creature under the sway of Dapertutto, but in love with Schlemihl. Hoffmann kills Schlemihl, but Dapertutto flees with Giulietta, ending Hoffmann's second adventure.

The third adventure concerns Antonia, a beautiful singer, but a maiden afflicted with the dread disease of consumption. Although she is an accomplished singer, her father has forbidden her to sing because, in her weakened condition due to the disease the effort taxes her strength. Realizing that Hoffmann has fallen in love with her, the father orders her confined to the house and instructs his servant, Franz, to keep Hoffmann from seeing her. Franz, however, being very deaf and not properly hearing the instructions concerning Hoffmann, welcomes him when he comes to the house. Hoffmann learns the secret and the reason for Antonia's confinement and forces her to promise him that she will never sing again. However, a little later on she breaks this promise, due to the goading of Dr. Miracle. The song sung for Dr. Miracle causes her death, and thus brings Hoffmann's third love affair to an abrupt ending.

The epilogue goes back to the wine shop, with the same scene as the prologue. The Muse of Art comes and offers Hoffmann consolation as a balm for his wounded heart. The visit of the muse fills Hoffmann with joy, but soon he falls asleep, largely overcome by the influence of drink, bringing the opera to a close.

CHIMES CONCERT.

The recital on the carillon of the Park Avenue Baptist Church, which will be broadcast by WJZ at 7 o'clock tonight, will be devoted entirely to selections appropriate to Christmas. Five numbers will make up this program, which will be opened with "O Come, O Come Emmanuel" followed by Barnby's composition, "The Cradle Song of the Blessed Virgin." "O Little Town of Bethlehem," one of the best known of the Christmas carols, will next be played, followed by Gauntlett's "Good Christian Men Rejoice." The broadcast will be concluded with the playing of "It Came Upon a Midnight Clear."

BROADCASTER GIVES ADVICE ON PREPARING RADIO TALKS

Speak From Personal Experiences and Watch Diction, He Recommends—Human Interest Element Holds Audience Best

THE possibilities of radio are beyond the conception of the average individual, according to Sidney W. Ashe, head of the Welfare Department of the General Electric Company, in a recent talk to the members of the Rotary Club in Springfield, Mass.

"Broadcasting is probably an old story to most of you," said Mr. Ashe, "but as the art has made such tremendous strides the past few years I thought you might be interested in a few personal experiences in giving a dozen or more talks through WGY, Schenectady.

"I hold in my hand four letters that came to my office from foreign countries as a result of sending out a Hallowe'en talk on Hallowe'en. One of these letters is from Scotland, another from South Wales, a third from England, and a fourth from Cape Town, South Africa, a distance of over 6,000 miles.

"Can you imagine the feeling of responsibility that comes over a radio speaker in the preparation of a talk when he knows that if the weather conditions are ideal and if his talk is sent out on short wave transmission as well as the regular transmission, his voice will be heard over an area equal to nearly one-third the earth's surface? You can readily understand, therefore, why some amateurs like myself find it necessary to devote fully 200 hours to the preparation of one little talk, which will be transmitted in about twelve minutes.

What Talks Must Contain.

"The talk must be interesting, must contain human interest experiences, must teem with life, must awaken your sympathies, must have no unnecessary words, and must roll along easily and smoothly.

"Radio broadcasts not only your spoken word but your personality as well. Suppose you ask some one to read a poem and then you read aloud a similar poem to him giving proper emphasis where needed. I think you will find that the poem as you read it is fully five times as effective as the read poem, and if a third poem of similar nature is listened to over the radio as read by a professional announcer where the radio adds its power or strength to it, I am wondering whether you will not find that it is fully ten times as effective as the poem read aloud.

"In other words, from my own observation it would seem that the message as received over the radio was fully five times as effective for popular material as reading it. This probably explains why an advertiser is willing to pay $500 an hour to broadcast a program where the major part of it will be in the nature of entertainment and the advertising only incidental.

"Radio has given us the greatest opportunity ever created by man to broadcast personality and atmosphere. We write a radio talk usually as a result of an inspiration. That is the first requisite for a good talk—inspiration.

"After your inspiration, the second requisite to a good talk is that it must be a subject that you are thoroughly familiar with. You need a rich background of experience that you can draw upon for facts, for there are only certain facts that you have at your disposal that can be shaped in such a manner that you can make them of personal interest.

"Technical material when used must be brought into the talk in an indirect way, and be tied up to some human interest experience that will hold the interest of the listener.

"Remember that there is so much material on the air that is probably better than the talk you are giving or at least more entertaining, that with a slight motion of the dial you are gone and probably forgotten. The sustaining of interest is best likened to running a quarter of a mile—the distance is just short enough so you have to run at almost full speed the entire way. So you must sustain interest in your talk from the very beginning to the end—the slightest lapse and you lose the listener—he shuffles the dial.

"You may have an excellent subject in which you have been properly inspired, you may be thoroughly posted, and you may develop it in the right sequence, but will the public be interested? How can you sustain their interest? In my talks I endeavor to break the talk at definite points and introduce something of a poetic nature, something which has a humorous slant to it, or something concerning a real human interest experience.

Rehearsals Are Helpful.

"With regard to transmission I find that it is desirable to read the talk aloud ahead of time and listen to your voice as you read, to see that you are speaking distinctly, slow enough, and that you are carefully enunciating each word. Although the talk is read you must read it with the right emphasis, putting enough of your personality into it, so that the listener will not know you are reading. Then you must learn to read without clearing your throat, or rattling your paper, and you must not breathe too hard. The microphone is so sensitive that everything is sent out. It is well to hold your paper up as you read, for if you look down, the listener with the change in direction of your voice will know you are reading. Keep your mouth in a direct line with the microphone so you talk direct at it.

"If you talk at an even pitch, not fluctuating your voice between too great a range, the man in the control room can control it to the best advantage. Do not drop your voice too abruptly at the end of sentences, or it will fade out, and beware of too many s's, so you will not get too much hissing sound. Any word you find in practicing aloud that bothers you, and which will not read easily, discard. Remember that every word that can be eliminated, strengthens it just so much, for each word requires just so much time to transmit, and if it does not help the talk, discard it. Brevity is the soul of wit—particularly with a radio audience.

"Radio talks should not be too long—between ten and twelve minutes is ample. Where a talk is in two parts, and music is used before and after the talk, and as a background to part of the talk, it may extend to a maximum time of eighteen minutes including the intermission and interludes."

SHIP TO SHORE RECORD ESTABLISHED

ALL daylight records for direct communication between ship and shore are believed to have been broken last week when Station KFS, at San Francisco, Cal., communicated with the S. S. President Wilson of the Dollar Steamship Company then at a distance of 3,120 miles west of the Golden Gate.

The best previous daylight record is said to be about 2,400 miles for this class of communication.

After dispatches were exchanged with the President Wilson, messages were sent and received between the San Francisco transmitter and the President Cleveland, 800 miles west of Honolulu.

"Love's Old Sweet Song," played as a marimba duet, will be heard during a broadcast from WJZ at 8:30 o'clock Wednesday night.

"Rip Van Winkle" will be presented by the WEAF Light Opera Company Wednesday night at 10:30 o'clock, Eastern Standard Time through WEAF and WCAE.

The story unfolded in this opera generally follows the outline of Washington Irving's, but the librettist has introduced a new character, Peterkee, a younger sister of Katrina, who goes with Rip into the mountains. She returns, bringing a magic flask. The contents of this flask restores Rip's youth when he comes back from his long sleep and he then marries Peterkee instead of Katrina.

Excerpts from the musical comedies, "The Chocolate Soldier" and "Oh, Lady, Be Good" will be broadcast from WJZ Thursday night at 8:30 o'clock, and also from WRC, WGY and WBZ.

"The Chocolate Soldier" is an operetta by Oscar Straus. The song hits from this operetta are the title selection, "The Chocolate Soldier," "Clralala," "That Would Be Lovely" and "My Hero."

"Oh, Lady, Be Good" is a more recent musical comedy. Three selections from "Oh, Lady, Be Good" are "Fascinating Rhythm," "Oh, Lady, Be Good," the title selection of the show, and "So Am I."

Station WABC will present as a Christmas Eve feature Edgar White Burrill, who will speak on Washington Irving's "Bracebridge Hall Christmas Sketches." Around the story are grouped two or three poems, and the whole linked up with some vital current problem.

SURVEY SHOWS NEW YORK IS BEST MARKET

Empire State Leads in Sale of Broadcast Receivers—Radio Sales Index Compiled

A SURVEY undertaken by the Department of Commerce points to New York State as probably the best market for the sale of radio apparatus in the United States. Illinois is next, Ohio third and California fourth. In groups, the East North Central States lead, with the West North Central States second and Middle Atlantic third. These figures were arrived at through averaging the points of origin of applause mail from about twenty broadcasting stations of 5,000 watts and over, through data obtained from actual sales and through data compiled by a radio merchandising magazine.

12,000 Radio Dealers.

"The distribution of radio apparatus is important in that it considers the economical distribution of an industry producing at manufacturers' prices in excess of $170,000,000 annually, exclusive of such items as batteries," said H. E. Way of the Commerce Department. "In 1921 the prospective purchaser located with difficulty sources of supply. Five years later in excess of 12,000 dealers serve the needs of the broadcast listener with an almost infinite variety of products.

"At first with slowly growing momentum the idea of using the phenomenon of wireless as a means of popular entertainment spread throughout the world. The inertia of governmental action deterred its spread, but during 1925 the exports from the United States of this commodity totaled $10,000,000, while the United Kingdom shipped $6,500,000."

The Electrical Equipment Division of the Department of Commerce has compiled an index for the purpose of studying the location of the best markets for radio apparatus.

The distribution of radio apparatus is important in that it considers the economical distribution of an industry producing at manufacturer's prices in excess of $170,000,000 annually, exclusive of such items as batteries. In 1921 the prospective-purchaser located with difficulty sources of supply. Five years later in excess of 12,000 dealers serve the needs of the broadcast listener with an almost infinite variety of products.

At first with slowly growing momentum the idea of using the phenomenon of wireless as a means of popular entertainment spread throughout the world. The inertia of governmental action deterred its spread, but during 1925 the exports from the United States of this commodity totaled $10,000,000 while the United Kingdom shipped $6,500,000.

Because of the enthusiasm incident to a new industry obtaining such universal favor in the short space of time and the seasonal demand in the United States, the representatives of the Department of State and Commerce abroad were required to report at frequent intervals for the benefit of American manufacturers the status of the rapidly changing markets.

The location of present owners of broadcast listening stations if available would indicate the location and size of the markets for accessories and supplies. However, the index selected, i. e., the point or origin of "broadcast applause" mail, accomplishes this purpose without the expense of a census, clearly outlines the areas of best reception and eliminates the consideration of the density of population.

Humor will be the predominant feature of the program presented through WEAF and affiliated stations next Tuesday night at 9 o'clock, Eastern Standard time. Weber and Fields and Van and Schenck will be among the performers.

The opening broadcast of Christmas week from WJZ will be the Children's Hour feature, transmitted at 9 o'clock this morning. Carols and recitations will be heard at this time, including an abridged version of the Christmas story, "Why the Chimes Rang."

This story concerns two youngsters who lived in a foreign country. In their town was a huge cathedral, in the tower of which there was a set of chimes which had never rung since they were installed. The legend of the town stated that these chimes would only ring when some one brought a gift to the altar of the cathedral, the giving of which meant a great deal to the donor. Kings from all lands sent priceless treasures, but the bells never were heard.

One Christmas the two little boys took their entire savings for the year and struggled to the cathedral through a blinding snowstorm on Christmas Eve to lay their few pennies on the altar. Immediately the chimes started to ring.

***

August Heckscher, is scheduled to broadcast a talk on "Giving" Friday night at 8:15 o'clock from WMSG.

***

A dramatic impersonation of the characters in Dickens's "Christmas Carol" will be broadcast Thursday night from WBZ by Dr. Delbert M. Staley. Incidental music will furnish a background for the presentation.

A New Principle not-just another Charger

The ELKON TRICKLE CHARGER is as different from other "A" Battery Chargers as Radio Signalling from the smoke fires of the Indians.

It is so different that you no longer need worry about corrosive acids and alkalis, or water, fragile short-lived tubes or delicate moving parts. THE ELKON IS BONE DRY AND RIGIDLY SOLID, and operates without attention, noise or interference.

The Elkon AUTOMATICALLY charges your "A" batteries direct from alternating house current, regulating itself from maximum charge when your batteries are low, to zero when they are replenished to fullest efficiency.

It cannot overheat. Short circuiting cannot harm it. It will not overcharge. It has full wave economy of service, as well as the economy of an almost indefinite life.

Attach it to electric light socket and to your "A" batteries and turn it on. THAT IS ALL YOU HAVE TO DO. From then on the Elkon Trickle Charger keeps your "A" batteries charged for you.

Do you wonder that it has become the sensation of radio.

CLASSIC DRAMA REVIVED AMID OLD ROMAN RUINS

Theatres of North Africa Again Ring With Applause for the Poetry of Sophocles, Spoken by French Actors to Crowds of Arabs and Europeans

By JAMES GRAHAM.

FIVE acts of a Greek tragedy as a first-class theatrical attraction in a far-away African colony would sound like an insane business proposition to the average New York producer. Yet the writer has seen a vast amphitheatre packed to overflowing, the serried rows of French settlers interspersed with an appreciable number of Arabs, listening in silence to actors of the Comédie Française in "Oedipus Rex." Not once, but many times. At Cherchell, at Djemila, at Timgad, at Guelma; in the rich Province of Oran and in the scorched valleys of the Aures Mountains bordering on the Sahara, where some of the audience rode two days on horseback across the wilds in order to hear the deep voice of Albert Lambert boom and thunder the lines of Sophocles and feel the profound spell of Mme. Jane Delvair's tragic art.

It is far from the Théâtre Française to Timgad and Djemila. It is far from the mellow atmosphere of the Palais Royal to the fierce furnace of North Africa. But no long road is so long that it cannot be traveled by crusader first and pilgrim after. No space is so wide that it cannot be spanned by the imagination. The passing of the centuries can be forgotten.

Rome carried her culture across Europe, across part of Asia, across part of Africa at the point of the sword. But it was the Gaul and the Frank who made it theirs. When the French today speak of themselves as the traditional champions of Latin culture, theirs is no idle claim.

To France the maintenance of the classic tradition has always appeared as a sacred duty to mankind. The strength of her belief is such as to give it the true ardor of faith. Who but France would today go out into the desert and preach the gospel of classic art?

French Feal Responsibility.

Nowhere, perhaps, do the French more keenly feel the responsibility of this heritage they have made theirs than in the empire they have built for themselves in North Africa. In truth, there is here additional cause. From the confines of Tripoli in the East to the Atlantic Coast in the West, one monument rises after another in almost unbroken series to recall the days when this French empire was that of Rome. From Gigthi on the Libyan Sea to Volubulis in Morocco, from the Isle of the Lotus Eaters in the Gulf of Syrta to the Pillars of Hercules, one has but to scratch the soil to discover fresh traces of the days when Rome held sway and the legions marched beneath the sweltering sun to camp at Lambesa on the road to the far Saharan sands, or when the motley crowds gathered to fill the sixty thousand seats of the Coliseum of Thysdros, which still towers in mighty ruin over the little Arab village of El Djem. Thevesta, Dugga, Tipasa, Caesarea—all names to conjure with.

Caesarea—for fifteen centuries its buried ruins have been a silent tomb of Roman greatness in Africa. Beneath layers of yellow rubble and sand its theatre and amphitheatre have slept, with never a whisper to evoke the glorious past when Juba, King of Mauretania, and his Queen Selena listened to Greek plays or watched the ferocious sport in the gladiators' ring with cruel joy.

One afternoon some nineteen centuries ago native children crowded around the gates of the newly constructed theatre at Caesarea as the foreign conqueror entered, while their brothers and fathers held aloof in the background, watching with dignified interest from afar as the stone seats of the hemicycle gradually filled. They were the children of the ancient Iol—Caesarea now, since the Roman had come to change the face of things in North Africa. The play being given that day was something of an event, for it was the first performance in Caesarea of a drama by the great Greek author, Sophocles, called in its Latin version "Oedipus Rex," and was being acted by actors from Rome. And from Tipasa, om Icosium, from Rusguniae people had flocked to applaud.

A Motley Assembly.

On the day we walked across the central square of what was once Caesarea (Cherchell now, since the Frenchman has come to change the face of things in North Africa), a big yellow poster stuck on a white wall told us that actors from the Comédie Française itself would give that afternoon a representation of "Oedipe Roi," the French version of the Greek drama of Sophocles. A steady stream of French settlers and Algerians was entering the gates. Black Senegalese riflemen lined the roadway and herded back the little Arab ragamuffins swarming like flies around the entrance, their ivory teeth shining in their big, good-natured faces.

Away in the background, on the high bank behind the auditorium, stood dense rows of figures in flowing white burnous, watching the proceedings with the dignified aloofness of the Arab.

Long before the show started every seat, every available space in the theatre, was tightly packed with an eagerly expectant crowd. There were easily 3,000 there. And what an appreciative audience! Not a word was missed. From all over the countryside they had come, many as far as from Algiers, and nothing could for a single instant have distracted their attention from the stage. It was not often they had the opportunity of seeing acting of this quality. Humbler ones among the audience had no doubt seen nothing better than twelfth rate vaudeville by strolling companies at Algiers!

At Djemila the picture was another one altogether. At Cherchell the scene was laid by the blue Mediterranean Sea, in the midst of the dense vegetation of a rich province where square mile after square mile of green vineyard and golden cornfield rolls by the traveler with almost monotonous continuity. But Djemila lies far away in the wild mountainous country which borders the great steppes of South Algeria, perched nearly 3,000 feet high up in a valley surrounded by almost barren hills.

Nowhere, perhaps, can one better understand what must have been the greatness of this North African colony of the Romans than amid the ruins of Djemila. Not at Timgad, not at Dugga, not even before the mighty monument of El Djem. Timgad may be larger, the theatre and other buildings at Dugga may be more beautiful, the circus of El Djem may be as vast almost as the Colosseum at Rome. There is but one Djemila.

Supposed to have been founded by the Emperor Trajan, the city is practically entire today, with all its streets and buildings, and when the work of excavation has been completed these ruins should become as famous as those of Timgad.

The Old Theatre.

Partly unearthed, the theatre seats 2,500. It clings to the side of a steep hillock which shelters it entirely from the winds that blow rather disagreeably amid the bleak hills. As a result the acoustics are remarkable. Even when outside the confines of the theatre one could hear every spoken word from the stage with the utmost distinctness.

One might have thought that while it was easy enough to gather several thousand people together at Cherchell, in a district where one farm touches another and larger villages and settlements abound, it would be quite impossible to repeat this at Djemila, where the nearest place is St. Arnaud, over twenty miles distant, and where the country is entirely wild and barren. Yet the contrary was the case, for, if anything, success was even greater here. Certainly it was in comparison, when the difficulties of communication are taken into consideration.

A steady stream of cars carrying French or wealthy Algerian natives flowed along the road which climbed from St. Arnaud with hairpin bends along the steep rocky mountain sides, high above the empty stones and boulders of the valleys below. It was one of those twisted, winding, narrow mountain roads on which one frequently has the conviction that one side of the car is hanging over the edge, the wheels turning in empty space.

On nearing Djemila we overtook parties on horseback, native caids in magnificent scarlet burnous and white gandaras, with their gaudy retinue of wild horsemen and their vividly colored banners proudly flying to the wind. Many had ridden all night to see this singular performance amid the Roman ruins. Others tramped on foot through the dust. But from all sides they came, and since the days of Rome there can surely have never been such a gathering in these wild mountains. There must have been quite 5,000 all told, of whom about two-thirds managed to crowd into the theatre, while many of the rest sat on the grass outside, picking up as much as they could of the show.

Guelma, Timgad, Carthage were but repetitions of Cherchell and Djemila. Everywhere the story was the same and the picture identical but for the scenic setting of the theatre itself and the degree to which excavation work had been carried out and the stones had fallen to ruin.

But let us descend from the high realms of art to the hard facts of practical finance. It is of course obvious that the open-air representations in these antique theatres are not merely the business venture of some theatrical producer, but serve a higher purpose. It would be utterly impossible to transport first-class artists from Paris to North Africa and then have to move them around there into the bargain under unusually difficult and costly conditions and make it a paying venture. The undertaking is what we have conveniently accustomed ourselves to describe since the war as "propaganda."

It is of small value to know that you need only scratch the soil of North Africa to discover a priceless marble statue when you have not the wherewithal to buy a pick and shovel. The Archaeological Departments of the Governments of Algeria and Tunisia have done much, while the practical assistance of the military authorities has been invaluable. But the grants from public funds are small, for in these hard times the budget cannot be overburdened with expenditure of this kind. Private enterprise must be enlisted to carry on a task which is stupendous in its magnitude.

Work of Archeologists.

Various archaeological associations exist which do good work. Chief among them, both as regards the extent of its program and the personalities which it includes, is the "Société des Amis de Carthage et des Villes d'Or." Such names as that of Marshal Liautey, the Duc de Trévise, M. Louis Bertrand of the French Academy, Professor Gsell (who is probably the greatest living authority on the history of North Africa), Professor Appell, Rector of the Sorbonne, and many others of equal note are among its members. But two names must be mentioned apart—those of the Marquise de Tastes and of M. Louis Dal Piaz, Chairman of the French Line, who has made the welfare and development of French North Africa one of the chief aims of his busy existence.

Mme. de Tastes is the Vice President of the "Friends of Carthage," and with splendid energy she devotes much of her time to furthering a cause in which she has ardent faith. The success of the open-air presentations in the Roman theatres has chiefly been due to her untiring activities. It is her intention to make them an annual event, and to include Morocco as well as Algeria and Tunisia in the itinerary.

Perhaps, too, it may be possible to give a play at El Djem in the setting of the stupendous blocks of stone of the Coliseum. But where one would above all other places wish to see a performance is Dugga—Thugga of the Romans—where the stage itself is in a better state of preservation than in any other of the North African theatres.

ROMAN THEATRE AT TIMGAD

CHINA INSTITUTE FOUNDED WITH SECOND BOXER FUND

Operates in New York to Promote American Understanding of Chinese Affairs

OUT of China's anti-foreign Boxer violences came a conciliatory influence—arising from America's return of the first Boxer indemnity. Its effect has been broadened since the Far East Republic has been deranged and excited by internal war and distrust toward foreigners; for the second Boxer indemnity, also returned, became a fund dedicated to promoting a closer cultural and educational relationship between China and America. With this money was founded the China Institute in New York.

As the first indemnity went toward acquainting the Chinese with America, the second indemnity went toward acquainting Americans with China. Thus, when news of development in China seems difficult to understand, this organization collates and simplifies the information in the cables, and so places the events of the passing day in their proper place in the history of a civilization that is fifty centuries old.

The China Institute is non-political and non-partisan.

Broadens Efforts at Understanding.

The China Institute is being conducted under the auspices of the China Foundation for the Promotion of Education and Culture, and that foundation was created with funds from the second Boxer Indemnity, which the United States decided to return to China for educational use. This was a continuation of the previous policy of the United States, the first indemnity having been used to found a Chinese university, Tsing Hua, whose graduates were sent to America for post-graduate study.

So the Institute is simply broadening the scope of the original intention to use money owed as a war indemnity to promote mutual understanding as a foundation for future peace. Thousands of Chinese students have come to America, studied in American colleges, surveyed the American industrial system and taken back to China the lessons they learned in Occidental scholarship, commercial methods and improved ways of living. This, in addition to the penetration effected by American business, by medical, educational and other philanthropies like the Rockefeller Hospital and School, and by Yale in China has given China a pretty thorough idea of the way things are done in America. Besides, the Ford and the movies are as familiar to Chinese cities as they are here.

But the dissemination of Chinese ideas and knowledge and culture in America has made little gain—although knowledge and appreciation of her arts has spread broadly. This state of affairs the Institute hopes to correct. The director, Dr. P. W. Kuo, who is carrying on the program, knows both America and China intimately. He won his degrees at Columbia and in Shanghai. He has lectured extensively in this country, is Vice President of the World Federation of Educational Associations, a Fellow of the Educational Institute of Scotland, and has been President of the National Southeastern University in China and a lecturer at the University of Chicago.

Gives Information on China.

During the few months since the foundation of the Institute, in answer to many calls to lecture on China, he has traveled about 10,000 miles in the United States, appearing before private and official audiences, including the Williamstown Institute of Politics. In response to inquiries the Institute has given a good deal of information to Americans desiring general information about conditions in China, and in the cases of people studying specific Chinese problems it has referred them to the best original sources of information. Chinese professors will be invited to lecture in America. At present comparatively few American universities offer courses covering Chinese culture broadly, and these neglect modern Chinese cultural developments.

For instance, there is a renaissance movement in China today which is leading to the modern application of the cultural heritage of the past in a way that may be compared to the effect of the fourteeth century in Italy.

One of the most successful projects of the China Institute was the Chinese Educational Exhibit at the Sesquicentennial in Philadelphia. It was awarded one of the leading prizes. There the fruits of an educational system 5,000 years old were shown, as well as the influence of Confucius, China's greatest teacher, and the progress made in specific universities, provinces and cities. Chinese art and industry were displayed, and the century and a half of friendship between China and the United States entailing mutual benefits, was emphasized.

Other Activities Proposed.

Among the other activities the Institute proposes to undertake are the building up of an American library of reference on China, the conducting of research on problems affecting Chinese-American relationships and the publication of reports and bulletins about cultural developments in China and America.

CALIFORNIA FRUIT GROWERS USE STOVES TO FIGHT FROST

Success of Citrus Crops Largely Depends on Combating Cold Spells With Grove Fires

COLD winds that send the suburbanite to his cellar and the New Yorker to the janitor in search of more heat create for sunny California also a major stove-tending problem. In many of the great fruit groves every tree has its own little stove that must be kindled when a cold spell comes. California's success as a source of citrus fruit—originally native of the tropics—is in considerable measure dependent upon her finding effective ways to combat her periodical frosts and cold snaps.

Many devices have been tried. Faith in windbreaks, common in the fruit areas, is one of the reasons for California's adoption of the eucalyptus tree. These tall trees make an effective shield when planted in rows alternately with cypress, which provides a tight base for their height. But in recent years many windbreaks have been removed, both because they take up valuable space and because of the discovery that by preventing air drainage they tend often to increase damage from frosts when the wind is not high.

One of the first methods of protection was to run water through a grove, on the theory that it would give out heat in being cooled, and in some cases benefits have been derived from this measure. A more common practice is to wrap the young trees with cornstalks, newspapers and tar paper. The only successful way to fight cold weather, however, according to the findings of the agricultural experiment station of the University of California, is the use of orchard heaters. In an experiment conducted a few years ago on several groves of lemons (which are most susceptible to cold) the market returns per acre averaged $1,735 on heated plots and $284 on unheated. Three groves of another variety of lemon showed the following results: $352 on the unheated plot, $768 on the poorly heated plot and $1,423 on the well-heated plot. The total cost of heating averaged $100 an acre.

Oil-burning pots are kept under the trees all Winter and are filled from a tank wagon, which in turn draws upon the ranch reservoir of steel or concrete. Great care must be exercised in the filling process, since if spilled the oil kills whatever roots it may strike and will render the ground unfit for use. When the temperature drops to about 31 degrees experienced growers light the stoves under the lemon trees. They may wait until it drops a little lower before starting to heat the orange groves. Unless the cold is very severe, a section of the orchard only is heated at a time, but in the coldest weather all the stoves go full blast.

A freeze brings great damage to the trees and necessitates surgical operations afterward. Dead parts must be pruned away and loose and split bark must be bound to the trunk and whitewashed for protection from sunburning. When the bindings are removed the dead bark is cut away and the wound cleansed and painted.

There is always difficulty in separating the spoiled fruit from the unharmed. Within from five to ten days after freezing the pulp shows white spots, and if the fruit is left on the tree and continues to grow it develops a greatly thickened rind. But without taking a cross-section one may detect the damaged fruit by the spots that appear on the skin a few days after freezing. But all packing houses have machines to make the separation according to specific gravity.

The decrease in specific gravity in frozen fruit is due to the fact that the freezing kills the walls of the cells, changing them from semi-permeable membranes to a porous substance that lets the moisture evaporate with great loss in weight but no change in volume.

OLD QUEENS FORESTS INVITE THE RAMBLE

Long Island Borough Still Has a Large Area of Woodland, Field and Swamp Less Than Twelve Miles From New York's City Hall

By RAYMOND H. TORREY.

WITH all the spread of real estate subdivisions, of golf courses and metaled highways into the eastern part of the Borough of Queens, there still remains a surprisingly large area of forest and field and swamp, affording pleasant rambles for the walker, less than a dozen miles from City Hall and within clear sight of the skyscrapers of Manhattan. Tracts of several hundred acres, in unbroken beech, oak and maple forest, interspersed with fields filled with copses of sassafras and dogwood, or with tangles of greenbrier around the kettle holes in the terminal glacial moraines, still persist as relics of the ancient conditions in this part of Long Island.

The relative ruggedness of the terrain in the centre of Queens Borough, from Flushing Creek meadows to the Nassau County line, has kept much of it in forest and fields, with many of the old farms still in cultivation. Thus geology governed progress in development and turned the railroads and towns and the expanding tentacles of the metropolis along the north shore and along the southern level part of the borough about Jamaica and Queens. Between the north and south portions lie the two great terminal moraines which cover Long Island from the East River to Montauk and Orient Points.

The Two Great Moraines.

These two great terminal moraines, marking the dump heaps of two different advances of the continental glaciers of the Pleistocene Epoch, lie along the island like a vast pair of scissors, with the bolt holding the blades about in the region of the Wheatley Hills in Nassau County. The Ronkonkoma moraine, so-called because typically displayed in the region of Lake Ronkonkoma, extends from the bluffs of Montauk Point westward to touch Long Island Sound at Bayside and Flushing. The Harbor Hill moraine, which attains its most notable development in bulk and height in the neighborhood of Harbor Hill at Glen Cove, runs from Orient Point, the north fluke of the tail of the vast whale that is Long Island, along the north shore bluffs to Hempstead Harbor, then turns southwest, crosses the Ronkonkoma moraine and extends along the line of the hills north of Queens Village and Jamaica, through Forest and Prospect Parks, to the Narrows at Bay Ridge and Fort Hamilton.

The northern and eastern part of Queens Borough lies, so to speak, between the handles of the scissors. The Harbor Hill moraine, from the Nassau County line near Lake Surprise, on the Vanderbilt estate, to Cypress Hills, is continuous, without deep notches and maintains levels of from 100 to 180 feet above sea level. At its southern foot, along the line of Hillside Avenue, the ocean surf once rolled, when the Atlantic Coast was a hundred feet lower than now and there are evidences of offshore bars in low ridges which rise south of the moraine bluff.

Along both moraines, but more noticeably on the Harbor Hill moraine, north of Jamaica, Hillside, Hollis, Bellaire and Queens are found the characteristic kettle-hole ponds. These formed where a huge block of ice separated from the glacier front, remained for years while gravel and sand piled about it, and when it melted and its cover slumped a pit, frequently circular or elliptical, remained. Some still contain water for all or part of the year.

At various times during the advance and retreat of the ice front there was also a large lake bounded by the moraines and the glacier, covering fifteen or twenty square miles, from about the head of Newtown Creek eastward beyond the present Flushing meadows. Its bottom is marked by claybeds and by depressions east of Mount Olivet Cemetery and Glendale, in parts of which peat was found. The swamps of Fresh Meadow, between the Union Turnpike and Jamaica Avenue, emptying north and west through Kissena Park, appear to be relics of another smaller postglacial lake.

Glacial topography, wherever found along the line of the terminal moraine, from Cape Cod to North Dakota, always gives pleasant, smooth, rolling contours and usually bears a good mixed hardwood forest. Such is the case in Queens Borough, where man's doings have not disturbed natural beauty. These rolling contours have kept a large part of the borough a little behind development elsewhere and preserved the serenity of trees and swamps. They are slowly giving way to "improvements" and their conquest by the real estate developer is in sight.

The lanes and paths and farm roads in the region between the two moraines may be reached from the north via the Port Washington branch of the Long Island Railroad, stations in Flushing, or from the south by the main line to Hollis, Queens Village, going northward beyond the residence sections. A few blocks in either direction carry one out of built-up streets into the open and fields. One will have to use a few motor highways within the first morainal area in places, but there are many stretches of a mile or two of woodsy paths or along fence rows bordered with sassafras and dogwood, or across the kettle-hole ponds hidden in depressions in the hills.

Routes to Follow.

Another route is to take the Washington branch to Broadway station, Flushing, and turn south and east to Sanford Avenue, go west two blocks and then go south through Kissena Park. This is one of the prettiest little parks in Greater New York, with its pond and its fine oaks and beeches and maples and the moraine hills rising south of it.

East of the park, across the Jamaica-Flushing trolley line, the paths through the fields and woods and along the brook that comes from Fresh Meadows. Climb to the top of the section of the Ronkonkoma moraine and look west to the great arch of the Hell Gate Bridge and the towers and bridges of lower Manhattan. Drop down to the crossing of the Fresh Meadows Road and the Jericho-Hempstead Road and follow the latter east half a mile or more to Fresh Meadows, and turn south and east beyond a golf course, toward the steep slope of the Harbor Hill moraine, which looms up southward. Follow for one more east-west hard road, the Black Stump Road, there are fields and paths and fence rows to the south and southeast, to the crest of the moraine back of Hillside, Hollis, Bellaire or Queens. It is fine country, the birds that haunt farmsteads, robins and blue birds may be found there late into Autumn.

An IMPARTIAL OPINION

. . . From a survey of New York newspapers made by The New Yorker the recently established and highly successful weekly journal of the metropolis

NO ONE, inside or outside the newspaper business, will challenge the right of THE NEW YORK TIMES to be named first in any consideration of the metropolitan press.

It has not the largest circulation, nor does it lead in volume of advertising in all classifications. It has, however, in thirty years under its present ownership brought together one of the largest homogeneous groups of intelligent, well-to-do and responsive readers ever won by any newspaper.

Its first function, it conceives, is newsgiving. Features, opinions, even orders for advertising, must give way before the pressure of the day's events.

No mere parochial or insular standard of news suits THE TIMES. It takes the world for its district. And not only the visible world, but the invisible, for the researches of science into the unknown are reported as thoroughly and competently as are the murders in Mott Street or the mysterious policy of China. Explorer and archaeologist, chemist and astronomer, bacteriologist and engineer—all have learned to rely upon THE TIMES to inform the layman of their discoveries, and to tell them what their fellows are doing—always accurately, with restraint and respect for scholarly truth. THE TIMES is an essential tool to the business man, a public document to the statesman, a contemporary record to the historian, a reference bulletin to the shipper, the lawyer, the realtor, the financier, an inspiration to the educator, and to all other newspaper men an unfailing source and worthy model.

Foresight, energy and enterprise have enabled it to tap every spring of news in the entire world. Its men range far with assignments which are definite and yet leave play for individual initiative and talent. Skill and decency in training and handling men have equipped it to present the news with clarity and vigor. Courage in the use of space, lavishness, at times, but always governed by a fit sense of proportion, have made it notable for thoroughness and balance, each story being stressed for what it is worth, no more, no less. The human race has never had a newspaper so comprehensive.

Little wonder, then, that THE TIMES has a daily circulation of the highest intellectual quality, rising to 360,000 on weekdays and 600,000 on Sundays. Little wonder, too, that it enjoys an advertising prestige that is international.

No advertising campaign is properly built in New York unless THE TIMES has at least been given thorough consideration. There are many campaigns in which it is not a primary medium, but if it is not used, the reason for not using it ought to be positive. The burden of proof is not on THE TIMES; it is on the advertiser.

NAVY FIVE RALLIES TO BEAT COLUMBIA

Swift Attack in the Second Half Carries Midshipmen to a 19-14 Victory.

NEW YORKERS AWAY FAST

Pile Up Eight-Point Lead and Are Ahead at Close of First Half, 11-7.

VICTORS CLOSE THE GAP

Special to The New York Times.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., Dec. 18.—With a dashing attack in the second half, the Naval Academy overcame Columbia's lead at basketball this afternoon and won by 19 to 14. The intercollegiate champions of last year scored only three points in the closing half.

Five minutes after the game started Columbia led by 3 to 0, then by 11 to 3 and at the close of the half-time by 11 to 7. Nearly every member of the Navy five took an effective part in the rally by which the visitors were overtaken shortly after the start of the second half and afterward passed.

A desperate defense was put up by both teams, but Columbia weakened in the second half, while the addition of Graf to the Navy's forces helped to check Columbia's scoring in that period. Graf, a valuable guard last year, played brilliantly.

Lorch First to Score.

Lorch broke the ice for Columbia by scoring from the foul line and two field goals by Rothenfield followed. Another foul goal by Lorch and a field goal by Rieger piled up eight points for Columbia in five minutes, Smith scoring first for the Navy with a foul goal.

Miller scored next—the Navy's first field goal—but foul shots by Lorch and Cattagio kept Columbia ahead by 10 to 3. The Naval Academy started its rally at this point with Smith scoring three from the floor and Rothenfield making a foul goal fo. Columbia as the half ended.

Howard's shots from the line and floor brought the Navy within one point of Columbia as the second half began, but Rieger scored a field goal. The only one made by Columbia during the half. Hamilton and Graf both scored from the foul line and then Lloyd, who had just taken Smith's pass, dribbled down the court and made a fine backward toss, putting the Navy a point to the lead with four minutes to play.

Miller Makes Long Shot.

Miller staged one of the longest shots of the game, from past midcourt. Foul goals by Lloyd for Navy and Rieger for Columbia followed and Malley scored the final points on a field goal a minute before the game ended.

The line-up:

NAVY (19).		COLUMBIA (14).

HAMILTON, N. Y., Dec. 18.—Colgate won its second basketball game of the season when it tscored a 39—12 victory over Williams here tonight. The Maroon quintet gained a big lead in the first half and never was pressed.

Williams tallied in the first few seconds of play but the Colgate five's clever passing attack soon penetrated the Purple's zone defense system and the score mounted until the Maroon led 22—4 at the end of the first half.

The second period found the Maroon rallies again coming thick and fast while Williams was able to gather only two points until Coach Reid sent in the Maroon substitutes.

The line-up:

LOSERS STAGE GAME RALLY

Trail by 6 Points Near Finish When Feeney and Freeman Cage Spectacular Shots.

Special to The New York Times.

WEST POINT, N. Y., Dec. 18.—The Army basketball season got under way here today with the cadets defeating St. John's College of Brooklyn in the opener, 25 to 24. The game was hard fought throughout.

Although the Army five had a margin of six points in its favor as the game neared its end, the Brooklyn collegians, by a sudden burst of speed during which Feeney and Freeman electrified the crowd with sensational shooting, came within one point of tying the score. In fact, Freeman's last basket was on its way when the final gun sounded.

Army took the lead at the start and held it to the end. Neither team could find the basket for nearly ten minutes of the opening period, but Army finally broke through and led at half time, 11 to 7, the Cadets having shot four field goals to St. John's two in that half.

Draper and Stober were leading point getters for the Cadets in the final half. Feeney, by fine guarding and sensational shooting, stood out among St. John's players.

Miss Kay Meehan and Miss Hazel Johnson shared scoring honors for Hunter with twelve points each. Miss R. Lichtenberg starred for N. Y. U. The visitors led at the end of the first quarter, 7 to 4, but Hunter rallied to take the lead at half time, 14 to 12. The line-up:

PAY RISE TO LANDIS WAS SPONTANEOUS

Owners Taken Completely by Surprise When Veeck of Cubs Made the Motion.

BUT QUICKLY ENDORSED IT

Landis Also Taken Unawares, It Is Revealed, by Johnson's Return to Advisory Board.

By JAMES R. HARRISON.

The motion to increase Kenesaw M. Landis's salary from $50,000 a year to $65,000 at Thursday's joint meeting in Chicago came from a National League man, it was learned from New York baseball men who returned from the convention yesterday.

Apparently the salary boost was a spontaneous matter. The American League did not know it was coming, and neither did the National, which was said to be opposed to any Christmas gift to the Commissioner.

By agreement between the two leagues an American Leaguer, Colonel Jacob Ruppert, was selected to make the nominating speech for Landis. The junior circuit wanted the honor in order to show the public that it was not opposed to Landis, as rumored.

After Colonel Ruppert's nominating speech, Tom Shibe of the Athletics, carried away by the excitement of the moment, jumped to his feet and seconded the nomination.

"Where do you get that stuff?" Colonel Ruppert asked in substance. "Hasn't the National League anything to say about this?"

Thereupon Shibe withdrew his seconding motion and William Veeck, President of the Cubs, seconded the nomination with the amendment that Judge Landis's salary be raised $15,000.

Ruppert Accepts Amendment.

Although the suggestion was a complete surprise to the American League—and most of the National League, too—Colonel Ruppert showed his mettle in a pinch by immediately accepting the amendment. The motion was carried unanimously.

How the American League got itself into a ticklish hole and was saved by Landis was described by one of the homecoming travelers. It seems that the American League was advised by one of its own men that Landis would not be displeased if Ban Johnson were restored to the Advisory Council, whence he was banished by his club owners two years ago at Landis's demand.

Acting on this information, the American League put Ban back on the Council, only to learn when it was too late that Landis had never sanctioned the act. What if the Judge refused to accept Johnson as a fellow-councilor? Then the American League would have to backtrack once more. But Landis saved the situation and showed a sense of humor by agreeing to Johnson's reappointment.

Maybe this was the reason for the extreme cordiality shown toward the Judge by the Johnson faction. According to all accounts, the joint meeting turned out to be a love feast. As soon as the meeting had ended Johnson jumped to his feet and went forward to be the first to congratulate Landis. The two then posed smilingly for the cameras.

Unable to attend Landis's jollification dinner at the Chicago Athletic Association on account of ill-health, Johnson personally expressed his regrets to the Commissioner.

Ball Also Causes Surprise.

The behavior of Phil Ball, Johnson's chief supporter, was no less strange. For the first time in six years Ball voted on Landis's side when he cast a

Nation's Sport Goods Bill $50,000,000, Against $98,000,000 for Gum, Says Griffith

AMES, Ia., Dec. 18 (AP).—The nation's sporting goods bill for last year was between $40,000,000 and $50,000,000, compared to $98,000,000 for chewing gum, Major John L. Griffith, Big Ten Athletic Commissioner, said here today in justifying the expenditure of money for sports. He considers the cost of athletics as low compared to some of our other national pastimes.

Major Griffith spoke before a basketball rules interpretation conference of 200 coaches, officials and school authorities.

The Commissioner anticipates an increase in the respect of coaches and players for the rulemakers in the future, declaring the day was passing when a coach might train his men to deliberately violate rules when they believe they can do so without penalty.

TILDEN IS VICTOR IN THREE MATCHES

MAKES BRILLIANT SHOTS

Dazzles Gallery as He Gains Final, Where He Will Meet Alonso, a Double Winner.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 18.—Playing in his last American tournament before he sails for Europe early in the new year, William T. Tilden, former national tennis champion, today easily disposed of Neil Sullivan of Lehigh University on the Penn A. C. courts, 6—3, 6—0.

Tilden appeared as sprightly as ever as he raced around the indoor court. He took a "warm up" set, 6—0. The crowd thought it counted in actual play, but "Big Bill" shouted across the net to his opponent, "We are both off form. Let's start all over again."

Then Tilden had trouble in placing his shots and the collegian took three games. The former titleholder fairly dazzled the crowd with his brilliant shots in the love set that terminated the match.

The point score:

FIRST SET.

Tilden	4	1	4	2	4	4	4	0	5	—28—6
Sullivan	1	4	1	4	1	1	1	4	2	—19—3

SECOND SET.

Tilden	5	4	7	4	4	7	—31—6
Sullivan	3	1	5	1	2	5	—17—0

In an exhibition set with Wilbur F. Coen Jr. of Kansas City, the youth who will accompany him abroad, Tilden was beaten, 6—4. Tilden smiled every time the youth made a good shot. Later Coen was beaten by Don Strachan, former Tilden protégé, who is now a student at Princeton, the scores being 6—3, 6—2.

Manuel Alonso, Spanish Davis Cup star, easily won from Samuel Gilpin of this city, 6—2, 6—1.

Francis T. Hunter of New York met with a surprise in his second set against Horace Orser of the Hun School, Princeton. Orser, a former metropolitan scholastic star, dropped the opening set, 6—1, but made Hunter go the limit to take the second set, 8—6.

In the evening Tilden gained two more victories. He first defeated Joseph Rowland with the loss of only one game, that in the second set, and then in the semi-final he triumphed over Francis Hunter with astonishing ease though the scores of 6—3, 6—3 do not show his real superiority.

Alonso had little trouble in disposing of Strachan 6—2, 6—3, and thus won the right to meet Tilden in the final tomorrow afternoon.

The summaries:

First Round—William T. Tilden, Philadelphia, defeated Neil Sullivan, Lehigh University, 6—3, 6—0; Manuel Alonso, Spain, defeated Samuel Gilpin, Philadelphia, 6—2, 6—1; Donald Strachan, Princeton University, defeated Wilbur F. Coen Jr., Kansas City, 6—3, 6—2; Francis T. Hunter, New York, defeated Horace Orser, Hun School, Princeton, 6—1, 8—6.

NEW UTRECHT WINS STUYVESANT MEET

FITMAURICE TAKES MILE

Victor Fitsmaurice of New Utrecht High School, P. S. A. L. cross-country champion, showed his ability indoors when he won in sensational style the mile race which was one of the features of the twenty-second annual track and field meet of the Stuyvesant High School, held last night in the 102d Engineers' Armory on Washington Heights.

The meet proved to be another triumph for the New Utrecht High School of Brooklyn. The youngsters from across the bridge, who opened the indoor season with a victory, rolled up 26 points. Manual Training School, also of Brooklyn, was second with 19 points. Stuyvesant itself could get only 17 points. The Boys' High School team of Brooklyn and the James Monroe High School team of the Bronx were tied for fourth place with 10 points each.

Fitzmaurice showed his heels to a field of thirty-one other milers by a thrilling last-lap sprint, which carried him past all opposition to win by ten yards. His time was 4:43 2-5.

Vernon Welch of Manual Training High School was second. He closed with a great rush, to finish ahead of Sam Teitelman of Newtown High School. Fitzmaurice, however, had strength in reserve and let out another notch himself to maintain his lead. George Jamieson of Kearny High School, New Jersey, was fourth. Teitelman was two yards behind Welch for third place.

Crowd of 3,000 Attends.

The meet was one of the most successful held this season and it attracted a cheering crowd of 3,000 youngsters. The field of competitors was also large, more than 1,200 schoolboys in the city high schools competing for the individual medals and team prizes. The meet consisted of eleven open events and others for Stuyvesant High School students only. The entrants were all from high and prep schools.

The race in which Fitzmaurice won was merely one of a number of events each of which thrilled the spectators. An upset developed in the 100-yard dash when Arno Reuter, the P. S. A. L. 220-yard champion and the favorite to win the event, was shut out in one of the preliminary heats.

Reuter was shut out in the semi-final heat when he finished third behind William Tarakinsky of James Monroe High School and Everard Donald of SACRAMENTO, Cal., Dec. 18.—Joe Turnesa of New York and Eddie Loos of Chicago continued to share first position in the Sacramento open golf tournament here today with identical scores of 73, 71—143 for thirty-six holes over the Del Paso Country Club course.

With the final thirty-six holes to be played tomorrow, Turnesa and Loos hold a substantial lead on all the others in the field except Bill Mehlhorn, unattached, who also turned in a 71 today to maintain his position two shots behind the leaders.

Only one other well-known professional is within seven strokes of the leaders. He is Tommy Armour of Washington, another who had 71 today. His total is 148.

At 149 is Arthur Demane, assistant professional at the Sound View Golf Club at Great Neck, L. I. Demane today set a course record with a brilliant card of 68, the first time 70 has been broken on the Del Paso layout.

Nabholtz Slips Back.

Improved weather conditions today made scores lower than yesterday. Larry Nabholtz of Cleveland was an exception to the general improvement. Tied for third at 74 on the first round, he had a 76 today, placing him even at 150 with Bobby Cruickshank of New York for sixth place.

At 151 are several other stars, including Johnny Farrell, Johnny Golden, Al Watrous and Al Espinosa.

George Duncan, noted British veteran, required another 79, leaving him well down the list. Duncan, who has played only four days of golf since his arrival from London, is not driving well, hooking most of his tee shots. He had three 5s and three 6s on the first seven holes and then came back in 36 with another 6 on No. 10.

Turnesa was playing almost flawless golf. Ten-foot putts that dropped on the first and ninth holes put him out in 34. His only mistakes coming home were sliced second shots on the twelfth and seventeenth and a hooked second on No. 13.

Inability to hole more of his short putts kept Loos from breaking 70, but the eighth hole held some consolation for him when he holed a chip shot for an eagle. The Chicagoan had few regrets up to the greens.

Demane Gets Birdie.

Demane was putting steadily and on those rare occasions when he encountered trouble he recovered well. He dropped a fifteen-foot putt for a birdie on the first and a ten-footer for a 2 on the third.

On the thirteenth his drive was sliced

AMERICAN SEXTET BOWS TO CHICAGO

OTTAWA AND MAROONS TIE

Battle Through Overtime Session Without Scoring—Boston and Canadiens Victors.

CHICAGO, Dec. 18 (AP).—The Chicago Black Hawks gained the lead in the American group of the National Hockey League here tonight when they defeated the New York Americans by a score of 4 to 2.

Playing sensationally in the last half of the first period, the Black Hawks overcame a 1-goal lead held by the Americans and scored three goals in less than three minutes. Red Green drove the disk into the net in 5:35 for the first score, after Raise had passed from the right side of the rink on the play. Dick Irvin then evened the count for Chicago in 10:35 on a pass from Dye, and one minute and fifty seconds later Dye shot from directly in front of the net on a pass from Hay. Fraser scored the Hawks' third goal thirty seconds later on an assist from Wilson.

Taking advantage of a penalty, the Black Hawks scored first in the second period, Dye shooting from directly in front of the goal in 15:15. Roach then took the disk the entire length of the ice and, shooting from the right side of the rink, scored for the New Yorkers one minute and forty-five seconds later. It was the best bit of individual work of the game. The Hawks were content with playing a defensive game for the most part of the period and checking the furious attack of the Americans.

SIR PETER TRIUMPHS AT JEFFERSON PARK

Colt's Charge Brings Victory Over Silver Song in Monteleone Hotel Handicap.

BULLETIN RUNS UNPLACED

Favored Bedwell Colt Is Never a Contender—Navigator Takes Third Money.

MARLBORO COMES THROUGH

Well-Backed Choice, With Veteran Jockey Crump in Saddle, Beats Fourteen Sixty in Opener.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW ORLEANS, Dec. 18.—Carrying the colors of Moss Goldblatt, Sir Peter gained his second consecutive victory at Jefferson Park when he won the Monteleone Hotel Handicap today. The handicap was the featured race, a dash of five and a half furlongs for all ages. Willie Garner had the mount on the four-year-old son of Paicines and Souvenir, which carried 118 pounds and ran the distance in 1:08 2-5. The winner was the second choice in a field of eight. He paid his backers $7.40 for each $2 ticket in the mutuels.

A good card was an offer for the week-end and excellent fields faced the barrier in the various events. Wind and sun are gradually drying out the course, but the racing strip was still slow all afternoon. The players fared a little better than they did yesterday, two favorites rewarding their backers, although the prices were short.

H. G. Bedwell's three-year-old colt Bulletin was the public choice for the fifteenth feature, backed to less than 2 to 1. He tired, however, after working into fourth position from a slow start and was never a menace to the leaders. Mrs. C. Garrigan's filly Silver Song broke into the lead when the barrier snapped, with the Greentree Stable's Broomstick colt Navigator in close attendance and Sir Peter third.

Garner Moves Up.

On the turn into the homestretch Garner moved up with Sir Peter and in the final furlong the colt rushed into the lead. At the end he won rather easily by a length from Silver Song. The filly held on well to save the place by half a length from the Greentree Stable's representative, Bulletin being five lengths back.

The players got away to a good start when they made the Audley Farm's gelding, Marlboro, the favorite in the claiming event for two-year-olds at six furlongs. This youngster did well in Kentucky, but had shown nothing in his two starts here. The word got around that he was ready however, and the money poured in for him, backing his price down to almost 2 to 1. Form ran truly, since Fourteen Sixty, the second choice, landed the place.

Willie Crump rode the winner and the veteran jockey held Marlboro off the early pace set by Fourteen Sixty. On the turn for home Crump called on the gelding, which challenged the leader, took command and at the wire was going away to win by a length. Fourteen Sixty held on to take the place by half a length from Pop Bell. The winner carried 115 pounds and ran it in 1:16 2-5, paying $6.20 in the mutuels.

It was another story in the second race, a six-furlong dash under claiming conditions for the older horses, in which the favorite was beaten a head by a long shot at better than 10 to 1. The winner was Miss M. Kelly's French-bred three-year-old colt Orestes II. He has a tendency to quit after showing early speed, but this time he was able to stick it out. He paid $22.80 for each $2.

Everglade in Favor.

Seven faced the barrier for the sprint, with Mrs. A. Swenke's veteran Everglade the public choice. Zucchini had the leg up on Orestes II, got him away fast and drove him into the lead, with J. H. Partridge's Geo. Groom following the pace and Everglade in third position. Around the turn Geo. Groom had a chance, but he dropped back when Everglade came up in the final jumps. Lord Martin was half a length back to take third money.

The second favorite of the afternoon to come through was J. Keller's veteran mare Bosh in the claiming event over the course of a mile and a furlong in which ten ran. This inconsistent daughter of Helmet likes a route and conditions altogether appeared to her liking, so the players gave her another chance and they were rewarded by a return of $8.40 on each $2 investment.

McElroy had the leg up on Bosh, which was favored by the feather of 103 pounds. McElroy broke his mount on top and she made every post a winning one. At one time, saving ground all the way, she had a lead of five lengths on her nearest opponent; but at the end she was hard driven and barely lasted to beat H. Jacob's Reveillon, the second choice, by a head. Zeus the Second took down third money after a slow beginning.

Victory to Long Shot.

Another long shot scored in the other race, at a mile and a furlong, under similar conditions, J. T. Johnson's Catesby winning and paying his backers $14.20 in the machines. Like Bosh, this Jim Gaffney gelding took an early lead and made all the running, but he gained an easy victory, coming home two lengths in front of J. Keller's Running Fox, with Hawk Eye a head back to take third money.

A lot of the public's money was burned up on R. Cooper's Halu. This veteran son of King James hadn't been out of the money in five starts at this meeting, and the players couldn't see how he could lose in this company. He was backed down to less than 2 to 1. He broke on top, but ran a very

Clinton Star Covers 100 Yards in 0:55 4-5 in Senior High Dual Meet Tourney.

LEADERS STILL DEADLOCKED

Manual and Stuyvesant Gain Their Eleventh Victories and Regain on the Top.

George Kojac, De Witt Clinton High School star, did not furnish a record performance yesterday in the continuation of the senior high schools dual meet swimming championship tournament under the auspices of the Public Schools Athletic League, in the Columbia University pool, but he flashed a notable performance nevertheless. Kojac, competing in the 100-yard free style event against Townsend Harris Hall H. S., swam the distance in 55 4-5 seconds, three-fifths of a second slower than his own world's scholastic mark.

Another De Witt Clinton swimmer shared the spotlight when Joseph Wohl took the 50-yard back stroke swim from Levine, a team-mate, in 31 seconds, a performance which has only been beaten by Kojac in P. S. A. L. competition.

De Witt Clinton defeated Townsend Harris Hall, 46 to 13, and ended the day tied with George Washington H. S., which won by default from Textile H. S., for third position. The teams of Stuyvesant H. S. and Manual Training H. S., victors again yesterday, maintained their unbroken string of triumphs and remained deadlocked for the lead, each with eleven victories. Stuyvesant trounced Flushing H. S., 45 to 17, and Manual Training vanquished James Monroe H. S., 48 to 14.

CAMBRIDGE SHOWS POWER.

Track Victory Over Oxford Was Closer That Score Indicates.

The victory of Cambridge University over Oxford in their recent dual relay meet at Fenner's in London by five events to two does not fairly represent the excitement which attended the result. It was not until the sixth race, which was at four miles, that Cambridge was assured of victory. There was some question as to the longer distance runners on the Cambridge side. The Oxford names were better known and the man in the street was inclined to say: "O'Connor we know and White we know, but who are these?" However, these young Cambridge milers covered themselves with glory, and the names of Arnold, Singer and Baker should sound a little stirring to those who saw a really memorable four-mile race, in the opinion of some of the critics.

The first five races contained nothing dramatic. And now came the four-mile contest, with Cambridge leading with three victories to two and needing only one more to clinch the victory. For two laps Thomas of Oxford hung at Young's shoulder, and then he came away to give Oxford a lead of thirty yards. Beresford began by increasing that lead. For two laps Arnold made no impression on him, but then Beresford's endurance was obviously spent, and amid great cheering Arnold almost caught Beresford in the straight, sending Singer off at O'Connor's heels.

For another two laps Oxford held the lead, O'Connor running well and gracefully, with Singer hanging on unobtrusively behind. The Cambridge man, however, spurted on the last lap of this relay, gaining a lead of thirty yards. In the last relay White, with his long, easy stride, looked a better runner than Baker, and it appeared as if the Oxford man would regain the lead. At the end of two laps White was at Baker's shoulder, and here he made what the critics believe was a mistake in making his effort too soon. He took the lead, but Baker came back valiantly.

Then it was seen that White's stern chase had taken too much out of him and he was not equal to an answering spurt. Once they were in the straight there was no doubt as to the result. White was done and Baker won for Cambridge by twenty-eight yards.

VICTORIES AT PENN SURPASSED DEFEATS

Athletic Record for Year Shows 91 Triumphs, 4 Ties in 167 Contests.

A record of athletic teams at the University of Pennsylvania during the past year, which has just been released by the university athletic officials, shows that during 1926 Pennsylvania, athletes engaged in 167 meets and contests, of which ninety-one resulted in triumphs, seventy-two in defeats and four in ties, for a percentage of .552.

The university was represented by teams in fifteen branches of sports. No championships were won in the major sports, but two titles were annexed by teams in the minor sports. The gymnastic team, coached by Dr. Francois D'Eliscu, won the intercollegiate championship, and the rifle team won the Middle Atlantic States title, winning all seven meets. The gymnastic team lost only one meet, that being an intersectional contest which was held in Chicago.

Branches of sports which show more victories than defeats were football, rowing, basketball, baseball, swimming, gymnastics, fencing, rifle and tennis. No victories were registered in boxing or golf, the boxers losing five meets and the golfers six matches. The basketball team finished in a tie for third place in the Eastern Intercollegiate League, with five victories out of the ten games played. Outside of the league clashes, games were lost to Dickinson and Syracuse.

A fairly successful season was credited to the crews, with a record of four victories, two seconds and one fourth. Pennsylvania lost to Navy and Yale in regattas in which Harvard, M. I. T. and Columbia saw action. Among Pennsylvania's victories were first places over Penn A. C. and in both the Childs Cup and Steward's Cup races.

Pennsylvania track teams experienced an unusually poor season. Coach Lawson Robertson's men were third to Harvard and Georgetown in indoor meets. In the outdoor meets Penn finished second to Yale in a triangular meet in which Dartmouth was third; lost to Cornell in a dual meet, and in the outdoor intercollegiates Penn was tenth with ten points.

Twenty-one games were won, eleven lost and one tied by the baseball team, Penn finishing third in th quadrangular cup competition. The swimming team won six meets and lost three, the water polo team won two games and lost six, the wrestlers won four meets and lost six, the fencers won four meets and lost one, the lacrosse team won one game and lost nine, and the tennis team was credited with eight victories and charged with five defeats.

During the 1926 football campaign the team won seven games, lost one and tied one. Penn defeated Franklin and Marshall, Johns Hopkins, Swarthmore, Chicago, Williams, Penn State and Columbia, lost to Illinois on a field goal by Frosty Peters and battled to a 10-10 tie with Cornell last Thanksgiving afternoon.

Five victories and as many defeats was the record of the soccer team, which for years has been an outstanding combination at Pennsylvania. Princeton and Penn State were among the teams which defeated Penn in soccer.

SCOFIELD ADVANCES IN PINEHURST GOLF

PINEHURST, N. C., Dec. 18.—W. L. Scofield of New York, medalist in the season members' tournament being played here, scored an easy victory today over his opponent J. L. Weller of Hamilton, Ontario, in the first round of match play. Scofield was 4 up at the turn. Weller lost the tenth and eleventh, ending the match with a score of 6 and 5.

In another match, J. S. Jones of Brooklyn defeated C. S. Strout of Biddeford, Maine, at the end of twenty holes. Strout missed an easy putt on the twentieth for a half.

The summaries:

First Division—W. L. Scofield, New York, defeated J. L. Weller, Hamilton, Ontario, 6 and 5; H. J. Blue, Aberdeen, N. C., defeated J. B. Blackburn, Oakmont, 6 and 4; J. S. Jones, Brooklyn, defeated C. S. Strout, Biddeford, Me., 20 holes; Donald Parson, Youngstown, Ohio, won from H. B. Swoope by default.

Demane's record card and today's cards of the leaders follow:

Out—
Demane	3	5	2	4	4	3	5	4	4	—34
Turnesa	3	5	3	4	4	3	5	4	3	—34
Loos	5	4	3	5	4	3	5	3	4	—36

Turnesa	4	3	5	5	4	4	3	5	4	—37—71
Loos	5	2	4	4	4	5	3	4	4	—35—71

Johnny Golden of North Jersey came back in 33 after taking 43 to the turn. He had three sixes on the out play, due to a drive in the rough on the first hole, a second shot out of bounds on No. 2 and a drive that hit a tree on the eighth. He played the last eight holes in twenty-eight shots.

Farrell three-putted the first and ninth greens, otherwise his 73 represented steady golf. Cyril Walker needed 78, his extra strokes being caused chiefly by chipping badly. Cruickshank's 73 was one of the best efforts of the day and included two short missed putts.

A twig on which his ball came to rest cost Mehlhorn a stroke on the thirteenth. He could not sole his club nor could he remove the twig without moving the ball. In attempting to play the shot, he knocked the ball into a ditch.

One of the best come-backs was made by Jim Carberry of Chicago. Through an error his name was omitted from the list of starters Friday and he had to start out at the end of the field, when the course and the rain were the worst. He had to struggle to make an 84. Today he had a 71. S. W. Hutchinson of Oklahoma City had a similar experience and took 93 yesterday and 77 today.

Fresno Tourney Off.

Word was received here that the Fresno tournament, which was announced for Dec. 24, 25 and 26, would not be held, and in its place a fifty-four-hole competition will be played at San José. Eighteen holes will be played Christmas Day at San José and thirty-six holes the following day.

Michigan Leads the Big Ten In 13-Year Football Rating

CHICAGO, Dec. 18 (AP).—The thirteen years' campaign toward the enemy goal posts, since the Big Ten reached its present status in 1913, gives the University of Michigan the best record in the Winter review of football glory. The Wolverines dropped out of the conference the same year Ohio State was admitted as the tenth member in 1913, but came back again four years later, and have won twenty-seven of their thirty-eight Big Ten contests.

The thirteen-year conference standing, Big Ten games only considered, and excluding 1918, the war season, follows:

Team.	G.	W.	L.	T.	P.C.
Michigan	38	27	10	1	.730
Chicago	75	44	24	7	.647
Illinois	68	40	22	6	.645

Minnesota	57	27	25	5	.519

FOUR YALE CREWS BOATED BY LEADER

Varsity Squad Gets Vacation, but Will Resume Training Indoors on Jan. 6.

FIVE VETERANS AVAILABLE

Members of First Eight Which Defeated Harvard Are Back—Material Is Promising.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Dec. 18.—Before dismissing the Yale varsity crew squad yesterday for the Christmas vacation, Head Coach Ed Leader told them that Winter rowing would begin on Jan. 6, two days after the opening of college, and that the four varsity eights which have been kept at work on New Haven harbor since they were transferred from the Housatonic at Derby last month, will receive a period of indoor tank practice until the ice leaves New Haven Harbor.

The Fall work just ended shows the four varsity crews better developed, as a result of the six weeks' program, than at this time in many seasons. Leader has organized four crews capable of keen intercollegiate competition.

The Blues, or first eight, includes five of the octette which outrowed Harvard on the Thames last year. They are Stroke Tom Laughlin; John Warren, 7; Dana Bartholomew, 6; H. B. Cannon, 5, and bow and captain, Fred Robinson. Of this quintet Laughlin and Warren rowed in the first eight two years ago.

Leader's second varsity crew, the Whites, has three members of the eight which outrowed Harvard at New London last June, Wardwell, 7; Durant, 3, and Meale, bow.

Laughlin, who has been Yale's stroke oar for three seasons, is again at his old position. Al Francisco has been selected as second varsity stroke oar. He stroked the freshmen two years ago. Ted Childs, who has figured in interclass rowing for two seasons, is stroking the third crew, and William Wright, freshman stroke last Spring for part of the season, is stroking the fourth.

First Eight—Bow, F. F. Robinson; No. 2, E. Callender; No. 3, W. R. Clark; No. 4, H. S. Griggs Jr.; No. 5, H. B. Cannon Jr.; No. 6, D. T. Bartholomew; No. 7, J. D. Warren; stroke, T. L. Laughlin; coxswain, P. H. Stewart.

Second Eight—Bow, H. B. Meale; No. 2, B. Brewster; No. 3, R. C. Durant; No. 4, G. L. Storm Jr.; No. 5, J. T. Terbell; No. 6, W. H. Satterthwaite; No. 7, E. R. Wardwell; stroke, A. L. Francisco; coxswain, G. H. Gilman Jr.

Third Crew—Bow, L. W. King; No. 2, B. W. Taylor; No. 3, W. C. Moore; No. 4, G. G. Schroeder Jr.; No. 5, H. H. Silliman; No. 6, M. R. Davies Jr.; No. 7, C. H. Brown; stroke, E. O. Childs; coxswain, W. E. Clegg.

Fourth Crew—Bow, F. W. Merris; No. 2, E. C. McHenry; No. 3, E. F. Ball; No. 4, T. B. Morton; No. 5, H. L. Ross; No. 6, J. O. Rodgers Jr.; No. 7, T. H. Wickwire; stroke, W. Wright; coxswain, C. E. Christiensen.

PITT FIVE'S DATES SET.

Season Opens Jan. 3 With Game Against Ohio State.

A game on Jan. 3 against Ohio State will open the basketball season for the University of Pittsburgh. In addition to Ohio State and the district opponents, the five will meet Michigan, Michigan State, Notre Dame and Syracuse.

Since the close of the football season the squad has been practicing regularly under Dr. H. C. Carlson, the coach. His biggest problem is to develop a guard to replace Captain-elect Elmer Lissfelt, who was compelled to drop out of school because of illness.

The full schedule follows:

Jan. 3, Ohio State at Columbus; 6, Allegheny College, at Pittsburgh; 8, Syracuse, at Syracuse, N. Y.; 14, Carnegie Tech, at Pitt Stadium; 21, West Virginia, at Pittsburgh; 25, W. & J., at Washington, Pa.

Feb. 2, Carnegie Tech, at Carnegie Gym.; 11, Grove City, at Pittsburgh; 12, Michigan, at Pittsburgh; 15, W. & J., at Pittsburgh; 18, Michigan State, at East Lansing, Mich.; 19, Notre Dame, at South Bend, Ind.; 25, Penn State, at Pittsburgh; 26, West Virginia, at Morgantown, W. Va.

WADDELL COMPLETES SWIM.

Winston Waddell, 21-year-old swimmer who is new to marathon swimming, is the first to complete the cross-Channel swim conducted by the Brooklyn Central Y. M. C. A. in the organization's pool, it was announced yesterday. Waddell completed the distance of about twenty-one miles in 11 hours 47 minutes of actual time, divided into eight swimming periods.

Ten other Y. M. C. A. members completed the swim during the week, while ninety-five others still are engaged in the event. Edward B. Griffin, 18-year-old swimmer, was the second to finish, completing the event in 12 hours 1 minute, but in seven swimming periods.

BIG TEN SPORTS G[ET] $100,000 IN TAX

But Public Gave $2,500,000 Football Admissions, Annual Report Shows.

ONE STATE ADDED $22,000

Minnesota Realized Ten Times That Sum From Gridiron Game—Camp Memorial Sum Held Up.

CHICAGO, Dec. 18 (AP).—Less than $100,000 of the taxpayers' money went into the college athletics of the Big Ten universities in 1926, the annual balancing of the books showed tonight, while the public as spectators contributed nearly $2,500,000 for football alone.

Public funds at the eight State-supported schools of the Conference contribute all the way from nothing to a maximum of about $22,000 a year for sports at these institutions, but the public eagerness to fill bigger and better stadia at goodly prices makes the athletic departments almost the only self-supporting branch of the schools.

Ohio State is one of several schools in the Big Ten which receive no money from the State treasury for sports; but from football receipts the athletic department gives $80,000 and considerable service besides to the alumni organization and other non-athletic activities for which there is no budget provision.

Michigan Gains Property.

Michigan had added $2,000,000 to the value of the university real estate through athletic profits, with the State as a formality contributing a small sum for salaries and the sports department returning this many times over in purchase of land and buildings. The public this year at Michigan contributed $350,000 for football tickets, while the taxpayer gave a net sum of about $12,000.

The University of Minnesota receives one of the largest State contributions in the conference, $22,000, but the football profits this year were ten times that sum, so they built a new stadium and plan a field house without coaxing the Legislature.

Illinois receives an inconsequential sum for sports in the State budget, but the distribution of its profits this year has led to an odd complication. A benefit game for the Walter Camp Memorial raised $4,000, but when it came time to send it in, there seemed no authority for giving away the "State money," and it may require an act of the Legislature to forward the public contribution toward the fund for the father of football at Yale.

Iowa Is Self-Supporting.

Sports at Iowa and Wisconsin likewise are self-supporting. Purdue receives $15,000 from the State and gives back $150,000 a year in various forms of student training and real estate.

Northwestern and Chicago, receiving no tax money, are among those which find themselves able to support activities unrelated to sports through the football fans' generosity.

Divided among the 26,000,000 people in the seven States of the Western Conference, the tax payers' individual contribution to Big Ten sports this year was about one-fourth of one cent.

N. Y. U. SIX LISTS GAMES.

Books Contests With Brown, Army and Syracuse Hockey Teams.

Three games have been arranged for the New York University hockey team, according to an announcement made yesterday by Coach Dutch Conner. The contests are with Brown, Army and Syracuse, and mark the advent of New York University into the ice sport. The Brown game will probably be played on Jan. 7 at Providence. The Army game is scheduled for West Point on Feb. 12. Syracuse will come to New York to meet the Violet, the game being scheduled for the Brooklyn Ice Palace on Jan. 15.

At the same time Coach Conner gave out a tentative line-up: Jack Conner and Fred Follette, wings; Arthur Merton, centre; Bob Barabee and Fred Brown, guards. The goal tender is Ben Rosenfeld. Leonard Grant is another candidate for the goal tender's job. Several candidates will practice work during the Christmas holidays to get into shape for the Brown game.

ICE BOAT RACES TODAY.

Long Branch Carnival Will Begin on the Shrewsbury River.

Special to The New York Times.

LONG BRANCH, N. J., Dec. 18.—With tonight's freezing the Shallow Point course, where the annual ice boat races are sailed, will be fit for racing.

The small boats will be put on the Shrewsbury River tomorrow and the third class boats, the largest sailed in this section of the country, on Monday or Tuesday, when the race for the Commodore's Cup of the Long Branch Ice Boat and Yacht Club will be sailed. The race for the third class pennant, held by the local club since 1920, will be a holiday feature, the club having accepted the challenge of the North Shrewsbury Club of Red Bank.

ballot for the Judge's re-election. More than this, Ball had a long chat with Landis, attended the Judge's dinner and sat right beside the host. This set several world's records.

No attempt was made, or will be made, to change the agreement under which Commissioner Landis operates. Not a word will be altered. After six years of the Landis rule the magnates had no word of complaint to offer.

According to the story told by one man yesterday, Bill Killefer was not released by the Cardinals, but asked for his release. President Sam Breadon had previously given Killefer permission to go after another job if he could improve himself. When Killefer walked into Breadon's suite and announced that he had signed with the Browns, Breadon was surprised, to say the least, and immediately gave Killefer his release after declaring that Killefer's action in signing with the other St. Louis team was unfair.

NEW YORK FENCERS TOO MUCH FOR NAVY

Visitors' Brilliant Blade Work Overcomes Midshipmen, 15 Bouts to 4.

EXPERIENCE TELLS STORY

Lieut. Calnan and Percy Star, the Latter Having Clean Record With Two Weapons.

Special to The New York Times.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., Dec. 18.—Lack of experience proved too much for the Navy fencers this afternoon and they fell victim to the brilliant blade work of the representatives of the New York Fencers Club by a score of 15 to 4. Foils, épées and sabres were used.

In the matter of points the Navy did fairly well, however, the visitors leading by only 70 to 40.

Lieutenant Calnan, formerly of the Navy team and once intercollegiate foils champion, and Percy performed spectacularly with the foil, and the latter with the sabre also, having a clean record with both weapons.

SQUAD OF 100 MEN FOR N. Y. U. HOCKEY

Meehan Is Helping Connor Form Strong Sextet—Enthusiasm Running High.

The latest venture into sport of New York University bids fair to duplicate the success attained by the Violet football team. Since the first of the month, when hockey was broached, until the present the progress of the sport on the Heights and at Washington Square has grown by leaps and bounds until now a team is almost ready to be put in the field for a schedule of games with major colleges.

With the support of Chick Meehan, head coach of the football team, the matter was put before the Board of Athletic Control and approved as a minor sport. Although practically all of the undergraduates maintain that this is the first time hockey has been introduced at New York University, many alumni of the institution state that there was a team in the previous century. Whatever the facts in that regard, the present team has already drawn a swarm of candidates.

From a band of twenty which answered the first call of Coach Dutch Connor, the squad rapidly increased to forty following the first few practice sessions. With heavy support coming in from Washington Square this number was constantly increased so that now almost 100 youngsters are trying out for the team.

The appointment of Dutch Connor, formerly star football and hockey player at New Hampshire, has done much to stimulate interest. Not only is Connor a hero himself in the eyes of the youngsters, but his younger brother, Jack, is captain-elect and star of the football team.

Practice sessions are being held at the Ice Palace in Brooklyn on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays for two hours each day. Meehan has been over to see the squad in action and has expressed himself as well pleased with the work of the men. Coach Connor has adopted the Meehan system of no predictions and declines to make any statements as to what he thinks.

MORRIS CHESSMEN LOSE.

Thomas Jefferson High School of Brooklyn defeated Morris High by 2½ to 1½ in the first round of the finals for the championship of the Interborough High School Chess League at the rooms of the Manhattan Chess Club yesterday.

Mattin and Landweber won their games for Thomas Jefferson and Kleiman scored for Morris. The game between Wolfowitz of Thomas Jefferson and Goldhammer was drawn.

In the second match Stuyvesant and New Utrecht each scored 1½ points and one game was adjourned, to be played out during next week. The winners were Elaine of Stuyvesant and Hirsch of New Utrecht. Lessing of Stuyvesant adjourned with Bernstein. On the result of this game the match will depend.

KAPLAN-GALFUND TO BOX.

K. O. Phil to Appear in Main Event at Ridgewood Thursday.

Matchmaker Jack Clifford has advanced his regular weekly show at the Ridgewood Grove S. C., Brooklyn, to Thursday night for the coming week, and has arranged three ten-round battles to feature the card. K. O. Phil Kaplan, Harlem middleweight, has been paired with Harry Galfund, rugged Brooklynite, in the main event. In the other ten-rounders Bobby Barrett, hard-hitting Philadelphia welterweight, will tackle Irish Tommy Jordan of Brooklyn, and Frankie Garcia, Spanish boxer, will meet Johnny Ventrl.

Peters, Indian Flyweight, Here.

The ranks of boxers here have been swelled by the arrival of a candidate for the world's flyweight title, Ernie Peters, full-blooded Chippewa Indian, who makes his headquarters in Chicago. He came with Sol Gold, veteran handler of fighters. Jimmy Kelly, who pilots Babe Herman, is to look after the interests of Peters while the Chicagoan is here.

Magerkurth of Minors Named An American League Umpire

CHICAGO, Dec. 18 (AP).—The vacancy left in the ranks of the American League umpires when George Moriarty was appointed manager of the Detroit Tigers, was filled today by President Ban Johnson with the appointment of G. L. Magerpurth. He has had International League and American Association experience.

DARTMOUTH LOOMS AS SWIM CONTENDER

Navy Also Expected to Give Yale and Princeton Hard Struggle for Honors This Season.

For many years Yale and Princeton have had little competition in the Intercollegiate Swimming League and the end of a season invariably finds one or the other at the top of the list. The Blue swimmers in the past few seasons have been somewhat superior to their rivals and the record-breaking championship team of last year set many new intercollegiate marks.

However, this season, with three new teams added to the competition, Yale will have to guard its title with great care, for two coaches have stated that Dartmouth has an excellent chance of wresting the crown away from New Haven. Navy, another newcomer, has its usual powerful aggregation, and according to indications at the present time will make a three-cornered fight for the honors.

The Green has a well-balanced team, with many veterans remaining from last year's team, which was the best in the New England swimming circles, and a host of men who come up from an unusually strong freshman aggregation. Two in particular are counted upon heavily by Coach Haselton. They are Michaels and Bryant, the former a diver and the latter a very speedy sprinter.

In addition the Green mentor has Captain Ken Ballantyne, who is a very good sprinter, and Langworthy, one of the best quarter-milers in New England last season. Russell is also used in the distance events. Simpson and McCaw can also be counted upon to score many points, for the latter ranks with the best back strokers in the league. In the breast stroke Haselton will depend upon Isham, who last year made an excellent showing when he finished third in the intercollegiates.

At the present time the Dartmouth coach is working hard grooming his charges for their first meet, which takes place on Jan. 22 against Brown at Providence, and it will be then that the strength of the Green will really be determined.

Navy, with two intercollegiate champions on its team and a host of veteran material, is gradually rounding into condition and should be well up on the list. In Halle Allen the Midshipmen have one of the leading breast strokers in the country. Allen last season won the intercollegiate 200-yard breast stroke championship and then went on to take the National Collegiate A. A. title in his specialty in the remarkably fast time of 2:41 7-10. The Annapolis watermen have another fine performer in Cooper, who last year won premier honors in the fancy diving competition. In addition Coach Ortland can depend upon Coale and Turner to account for many points, for both men can swim in any event.

Navy will have a powerful water polo sextet and again should cause Yale, the titleholder, some trouble. Last year the Midshipmen scored triumphs over both Princeton and Syracuse.

SALES IS NAMED GOLF PRO.

His Appointment at Sunningdale Surprises English Experts.

The appointment of Ernest Sales as golf professional at Sunningdale in place of Jack White, who has retired after thirty-five years' service, has caused surprise abroad, as he is practically unknown outside Addington. In fact, "the departure will be watched with interest both in this country and America, where competition among clubs for the recognised champions of the game has reached the stage where men are offered princely salaries," says George W. Greenwood in The London Telegraph.

"For example, Hagen receives £5,000 a year from the Pasadena Club, Florida, and is allowed to roam about the world at will. What the club receives for its £5,000 is not quite clear, but, apparently, it is quite satisfied with the bargain.

"Gene Sarazen and James Barnes receive about £3,000 a year each in the shape of a retaining fee from their respective clubs, while £1,500 is quite a normal salary for men who can 'produce the goods,' an essential qualification in the States."

Sales plays in no tournaments or competitions, and his name is quite unfamiliar to the golfing public. But he is regarded as a competent teacher. Sunningdale's choice from hundreds of applications for the vacant position, including many noted players, marks an innovation in club life abroad. Hitherto it has been the practice of well-known clubs, especially in the London district, to obtain the services of the big men, players with world-wide reputations, the object being to keep the name of the club ever before the public.

Rightly or wrongly, such a policy was considered good business, the supposition being that, with a champion golfer on its staff, members would be attracted to the club. Braid at Walton Heath, J. H. Taylor at Royal Mid-Surrey, Vardon at South Herts, Duncan at Wentworth, Herd at Moor Park, Ray at Oxhey and Havers at Coombe Hill are some of the cases in point.

Gardner to Box at Panama.

Eddie Roberts, manager of Spencer Gardner, Providence featherweight, yesterday accepted terms for a bout between Gardner and Jose Lombardo, Panama boxer, to be held at Panama Jan. 9. Gardner will sail for Panama Dec. 23. Roberts also announced he has purchased the contract of Davey Abad, Panama bantamweight, from Bob Levy for a sum said to be $1,500.

New Utrecht Hockey Players Missing a Goal in P. S. A. L. Match With De Witt Clinton.

JAMAICA SIX TOPS P. S. A. L. STANDING

Gained Lead From New Utrecht by Winning Two Games, While Rivals Are Tied.

The Jamaica High School hockey team moved from second place into the lead of the P. S. A. L. tournament during the past week by virtue of two impressive victories. New Utrecht which had been in the van dropped into a tie for first place on Monday when Jamaica won and then fell into second position when it was held to a tie on Friday, while Jamaica was winning its second game.

In the first set of games held last week, Jamaica, by displaying good teamwork, handed James Monroe a 10 to 0 defeat. In the other game on that day, Erasmus and Clinton battled to a 1-1 tie. New Utrecht, which was idle, slid into a tie for first place.

On Friday, Jamaica evinced superiority over Stuyvesant in the first half by running up a 3 to 0 total. Stuyvesant, however, was strong enough to hold its rivals scoreless in the second period, but the damage had been done. On the same day, New Utrecht, which was struggling to stay in front, struck unexpected opposition from the De Witt Clinton sextet, tied with Stuyvesant for third place. Clinton was the first to tally and it was only by a closing rush that New Utrecht registered a goal to tie the score. In the standing, Jamaica has eight points to seven for New Utrecht.

ENGLISH TEAM GETS DRAW.

M. C. C. Cricketers Held to Even Terms by Indian Opponents.

Bombay displayed great enthusiasm over the recent visit of the M. C. C. cricket team of England, which is touring India. The second day of the match between the tourists and the Hindus attracted a crowd of 25,000, the result being a draw.

The Hindus, who at the close of the first day were 347 runs behind, with nine wickets in hand, were not disposed of until after tea, by which time they had punished the English bowling to the extent of 356 runs, only 7 less than the M. C. C. score.

Earle's dashing innings of the first day for the tourists was beaten for both pace of scoring and number of runs by C. K. Naida, who hit up 153 runs for the Hindus in 103 minutes. He made all the bowling look simple. He scored at a terrific rate, reaching his century in 65 minutes. He finally was caught after a wonderful display of hitting, which included eleven 6s and thirteen 4s.

With only a little more than an hour left for play, there was no chance of arriving at a definite result. The M. C. C. had scored 74 runs in its second innings when stumps were drawn and the match declared a draw.

WINTER SPORTS STARS WILL SEEK TROPHIES

Men From Many Colleges to Compete in Carnival at Lake Placid Club.

College undergraduates who are Winter sports enthusiasts are awaiting with keen anticipation the Lake Placid Club's sixth annual College Week Winter sports tournament, which will be held on the last two days of this month. The President Harding and Marshal Foch trophies will be at stake in the carnival at the Adirondack Club.

The Harding Trophy is awarded for team competition, and last Winter the Universities of Wisconsin and New Hampshire were tied for first place. Both will send teams again this Winter.

The Foch Trophy, won last year by the University of Wisconsin through the brilliant work of Hans Troye, Knut Dahl and Robert Pabst, will be awarded for ski jumping alone. Eight events count in point score for the Harding Trophy.

Dartmouth, previously three-times winner of the Harding Trophy, will send a strong team, captained by Charles N. Proctor. Williams, winner in 1924, also will compete. Other universities and colleges entered are McGill, Bates, Michigan, Ottawa and Middlebury.

Leonard G. Anderson, Michigan captain, who was injured last year just before the Lake Placid tourney and was unable to take part, will return this year with his team. Some of the strongest contenders will come from Canadian colleges and indications point to the struggle for the Harding Trophy being an international battle.

New Hampshire is returning a strong squad of Winter athletes, including Gunnar Michelson, noted intercollegiate skiing star. Other contenders for places on New Hampshire's six-man team are Stewart Weston, former Foch Trophy winner; Ernest Pederson, 1925 winner of the United States Eastern ski jumping competition, and Captain R. B. Littlefield, snowshoe dash honor man.

The eight events for the Harding Trophy competition are: Seven-mile cross-country ski race, two-mile snowshoe race, 440-yard skating race, two-mile skating race, figure skating, ski proficiency test, including a race against time downhill around flags demanding sharp turns; one-mile downhill ski race and the ski-jumping competition.

Tisch and Setti to Clash.

Bantamweight rivals of the National Guard will furnish the action Tuesday night in the principal twelve-rounder at the Twenty-second Engineers Regiment Armory when Sammy Tisch and Carrol Setti clash. An eight-round semi-final will bring together Bobby Murray and Al de Silva.

PRO FOOTBALL HERE TO STAY, SAYS MARA

Giants to Play Next Year Despite Losses—Game Also to Remain at Ebbets Field.

New York will witness professional football of the league variety again next season, announces Tim Mara, President of the New York National League Giants. This in spite of the fact that the Giants played through the last season at a loss of over $50,000. Brooklyn, which combined its National League Lions and Horsemen of the American League into the Brooklion Horsemen, also will play again on Ebbets Field, according to Humbert Fugazy and Eddie Butler, sponsors of the combined offering.

Like the Giants, both Brooklyn elevens lost much money, but the promoters express the hope that with a better break in the weather and only one team in the borough the game can be conducted at a profit. Plans are already being laid to organize for next season.

The status of the New York Yankees, at present playing in the South, and the American League is more or less uncertain owing to the fact that only the Philadelphia Quakers and the Chicago Bulls, in addition to the Yankees, finished their home seasons. Newark, Boston, Rock Island, Brooklyn and Cleveland failed to complete their American League schedule. George Wilson's Wildcats are now touring with the Yankees in the South and their schedule calls for games on the Pacific Coast.

While affairs in the American League were uncertain practically from the start, things in the National League also found no primrose path. Twenty-two clubs started the season. The National League, with a stronger treasury, an older organization and more experienced teams and promoters, was able to weather most of its storms and brought practically every club in the league over the finish line.

The National League will hold its annual meeting and election of officers here the latter part of January, at which time it is proposed to weed out the weak clubs, strengthen the remaining elevens and to concentrate the organization. There is some agitation for a division of the league into Eastern and Western sections, with the victors getting together at the close of the season to contest for the championship.

Dr. Harry A. March, Secretary of the Giants, announced that the attendance at both New York gridirons was about equal to that of last year's total of 274,500, which averaged about 25,000 for home games, the out-of-town games drawing about 57,000. This year's average at the Polo Grounds was about 15,000, according to Mr. March. The team last year won ten of its fourteen games and this season eight league games were won, four lost and one tied, the club placing seventh in the league standing. The club, however, ended its season with a brilliant 31 to 0 victory over the Philadelphia Quakers, winners of the American League championship.

President Tim Mara of the Giants, in commenting on the Giants' season, said that he was not discouraged and that negotiations would be completed in the Summer to strengthen the club in the line and the back field for next season, when a strong attempt would be made to get the league championship.

The Giants paid all of their players' expenses during the season and at the end of the campaign checks totaling more than $21,000 were paid out, the sums varying from $1,500 to $3,000. In addition players who were injured were carried along with full salary and all medical expenses were paid.

HELEN WILLS ARRIVES HERE FROM COAST

Miss Helen Wills, former national women's tennis champion, arrived in New York from Los Angeles yesterday morning at 9 o'clock. The star, who was compelled to retire from the last championship matches at Forest Hills on account of illness, is visiting New York on her vacation over the holidays.

She will be here for three weeks and her intention is to play a little tennis on indoor courts and most of her days will be spent in the Art Department of The New York World.

Tennis officials did not know where Miss Wills was stopping while in town, indicating that her trip was not primarily concerned with the sport in which she has distinguished herself. Ordinarily when Miss Wills comes to New York reservations for her are made by one of the tennis officials, but on this trip this custom was not followed.

TO TEACH OFFICIATING.

Indiana University Institutes a Novel Summer Course.

Officiating in sports will become a part of the curriculum of Indiana University's Summer coaching school, it was announced recently. It is said to be the first course of its kind ever offered.

No previous scholastic work of any kind will be required of those taking the officiating course and classes will be conducted at night, four times each week. The semester opens on June 10 and continues until July 8.

Football, basketball, wrestling, track and baseball will be taught. The rules will not only be explained but will be demonstrated so that no phase of officiating may be omitted. A. L. Trester, permanent Secretary of the Indiana High School Athletic Association, has indorsed the course, saying that he hoped it would benefit the schools under his jurisdiction. He will attend several of the classes to discuss problems that confront officials in high-school games.

The coaching department of Indiana University, including Pat Page, Z. G. Clevenger, E. C. Hayes, Omar Held and Everett Dean, will conduct the classes. Western Conference officials will give lectures.

Other courses which will be offered in the Summer coaching school are football, basketball, track, baseball, intramural athletics, care of injuries, physical training, wrestling, supervising activities and other work along athletic lines.

BADGER FENCERS PRACTICE.

Gymnastic Team Also Prepares for Hard Season.

The fencing and gymnastic squads of the University of Wisconsin, facing a hard schedule, have been going through their paces daily under the direction of Coach A. L. Masley. A preliminary tilt with the Milwaukee Y. M. C. A. will start the season, which includes four conference meets and the all-conference final in Chicago.

Coach Masley has thirteen gymnasts and twelve fencers from which to develop his teams by Feb. 5. Coach Masley is optimistic over his outlook.

"The prospects for a winning team seem very bright this year," he asserted. "Although the candidates have shown better this year than at the same time last, the injuries which have been received since the beginning of the season have hindered our progress greatly. The chief difficulty with the 1925-26 squad was the lack of varsity material, since the season was started with only five old men."

The schedule follows:

Feb. 5, Milwaukee Y. M. C. A. at Madison; 12, Minnesota at Madison; 19, Purdue at Madison; 26, Chicago at Chicago.

March 5, Iowa at Iowa City; 11 and 12, All-Conference and Middlewestern meet at Chicago.

HASKELL INDIANS TRIUMPH.

Rout Honolulu Eleven, 40-7, in Game at San Francisco.

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 18 (AP).—The Haskell Indians overwhelmed Honolulu's town football eleven, 40 to 7, here today. A smashing offensive that ripped the Honolulu line to shreds and netted sixteen first downs brought six touchdowns to the Indians. Haskell drove over the goal line twice in the first period once each in the next two quarters and twice in the final period.

Cummins substitute quarterback for Honolulu made his team's only score in the third period after the islanders had recovered a Haskell fumble 4 yards from the latter's goal line. A feature of the game was an 83-yard run by Searles. Honolulu fullback, who took a kick-off on his own goal line and was brought down 13 yards from the Indians' goal.

HAGENLACHER DUE IN THE CITY TODAY

CHALLENGER IN RARE FORM

Recent Exhibitions Indicate He Is Playing Better Balkline Billiards Than Ever.

The world's 18.2 balkline champion, Eric Hagenlacher, is due to reach New York today after a six-weeks' exhibition tour through the Middle West. Hagenlacher has been displaying excellent form, but this will be necessary in view of the exceptional balkline billiards played by Willie Hoppe here within the last two weeks.

Hagenlacher will defend his title for the first time since he dethroned Young Jake Schaefer last March when he opposes Hoppe in a 1,500-point test at the Hotel Pennsylvania on Jan. 5, 6 and 7. Hagenlacher doubtless realizes the task that faces him and early settled down to serious training.

Based on his brilliant work against Kinrey Matsuyama, junior 18.2 balkline champion, at the Strand Academy since he started, a week ago last Monday, Hoppe is virtually certain to enter the challenge match a favorite. For 3,600 points in his first week of balkline after a layoff of seven months, Hoppe came back and turned in a grand average of 53, his work being punctuated by seven runs of more than 200 during the twelve-block exhibition.

As brilliant as was his work the first week, it was even better last week, when Hoppe gave Matsuyama a handicap of 100 points in each of the 400-point blocks. For the first eight blocks Hoppe had a grand average of 51 and for the first ten blocks his grand average was 79. He had one high run of 243 and many other runs in the 100 and 200 class. Counting his unfinished runs in one block, which were carried over to the next, he had one high run of 430 and another of 421.

Playing Better Than Ever.

Hoppe never played such consistent billiards in his long career. Only a few years ago, when he had a grand average of 47 for a championship tournament, he was acclaimed as a billiard marvel. But the fast pace set by Schaefer and Edouard Horemans naturally forced Hoppe to raise his game.

Few doubt that Hoppe knows more billiards than any person in the game today and as an all-around player he rates at the top. His balkline fell off considerably for a time, but it is a certainty that three-cushion play has not done his balkline any harm. Many contend that it has helped his game, as it has made him a more daring player and one who does not lose confidence when the fourteen spread. If Hagenlacher is in any kind of form and Hoppe continues to play the same brand of billiards, then the coming challenge match should result in some sensational billiards.

Hagenlacher most likely will do his playing at the Fourteenth Street Academy, where he has made his headquarters virtually all the time since he came here from Germany. William Rosenbaum, owner of the academy, was one of the first of the billiard men to see the title possibilities in Hagenlacher, and he did much to encourage him.

To Engage in Handicap Tests.

The remainder of the training schedule has not been outlined as yet for Hagenlacher, but he most likely will play the leading amateurs and semi-professionals in handicap tests. As for Hoppe, he has arranged to work only three days this week, meeting the three outstanding Class A amateurs at the Strand. His schedule follows: Tomorrow afternoon, Herbert Hammer; tomorrow night, Edgar T. Appleby, the international amateur champion; Tuesday afternoon, James M. Lewis; Tuesday night, Appleby; Wednesday afternoon, Lewis; Wednesday night, Hammer.

The rest Hoppe plans to take from Thursday until next Monday will be his first since last August. He has played four weeks at the Strand, meeting Alfredo De Oro the first week in a handicap three-cushion match, Otto Cepulon the next, in a 600-point three-cushion engagement, while Matsuyama has occupied his time for the last two weeks.

The playing of Matsuyama has been of such a high-class nature that he has virtually qualified for a trial in the next international tournament. He has had a grand average of around 35 against Hoppe and one high run of 296. He has displayed exceptional billiards for a junior player.

TROJANS TO LOSE 10 MEN.

Eleven of Letter Men, However, to Return to Southern California.

The Southern California football team will lose ten of the twenty-one men who received the monogram this year through graduation next Spring. Those who will return include six back field men and five linemen. If an operation on his knee is successful, Charles Boren, halfback star in 1925, may play with the Trojans again next year. He was out all season this year. The operation will be performed during the Christmas holidays.

Captain Jeff Cravath, Morton Kaer, Manuel Laraneta, Morris Badgro, Allen Behrendt, Kenneth Cox, Ted Gorrell, Brice Taylor, Field Thompson and Gene Dorsey are the seniors who received letters this year. The others are: Morley Drury, Bert Heiser, Howard Elliott, Al Schoving, Jim Moser, Harold Wheeler, Don Williams, Jesse Hibbs, Lloyd Thomas, John Fox and Alvin Schaub.

Other seniors to be lost are Bob Lee, Don Cruickshank, Bill Friend and Clark De Groote, lettermen in 1925, and Lloyd Hershberger and Ted Coffman.

Gorman to Face Delaney in Christmas Fund Bout in Jersey City Armory Tomorrow

DELANEY FAVORED IN GORMAN CLASH

ROSENBERG ON SAME CARD

Bantam Titleholder to Face Petey Mack in Christmas Fund Clash—No Titles at Stake.

By JAMES P. DAWSON.

Metropolitan boxing fans will get their first glimpse tomorrow night of Jack Delaney, world's light-heavyweight champion, since he lifted the title from Paul Berlenbach. At the Fourth Regiment Armory in Jersey City, Delaney is to tackle Bud Gorman, Nenah, Wis., heavyweight, in the principal ten-round bout on a card of four ten-round contests, which will be held for the benefit of the Christmas Fund.

Supporting this bout will be a ten-round bout between Charley (Phil) Rosenberg, world's bantamweight champion, and Petey Mack, Jersey City featherweight; another between Johnny Green, Harlem bantamweight, and Giovanni Salerno, Italian lad, and another in which Andy Di Vodi, promising young Bay Ridge welterweight, will face Jack McFarland, Elizabeth, N. J., boxer.

Though Delaney's title will not be at stake, the contest has attracted wide attention. It is accepted as a test which will give some indication of his qualifications for consideration as a heavyweight prospect.

Rosenberg's title will not be involved in the second half of the twin feature, but he is assured of a hard contest nevertheless.

Delaney Heavy Favorite.

Delaney will be a prohibitive favorite to beat Gorman. The light-heavyweight champion enjoys advantages in speed, boxing skill and hitting strength over the Wisconsin heavyweight which justify installing him a decided choice. The bout will be the first of a series planned by Manager Pete Reilly for the indoor season among heavyweights, and if the Bridgeport favorite exhibits ability which warrants the move, Reilly will continue his campaign to establish Delaney as a formidable rival of Gene Tunney, world's heavyweight champion.

Delaney and his rival are reported in good shape after their training periods and ready for the bell. Bill Duffy, manager of Gorman, yesterday expressed implicit faith in the ability of his lad to upset predictions and beat Delaney.

"A fighter who will come to Delaney all the time and who has a good left hook gives Delaney plenty of trouble," said Duffy. "Gorman has a good left hand, he tears into an opponent, as was shown in his bout with Harry Persson, and he will have the added advantage of being heavier and stronger than Delaney."

DELANEY.		GORMAN.

Rosenberg Picked to Win.

The battle between Rosenberg and Mack will be another in the campaign of the bantamweight champion to fight himself into condition for the defense of his title against Bushey Graham in Madison Square Garden Jan. 7. Rosenberg will be his fighting self at a notch above 120 pounds and is expected to beat Mack, as he did the Jerseyite's brother, George, in their recent battle in the same arena. Rosenberg is reported in excellent condition and ready for the battle.

The following table shows the physical measurements:

WANTS CANZONERI TO REPLACE GRAHAM

Manager Striving to Have Him Substituted Against Rosenberg in Garden Bout.

Sammy Goldman, manager of Tony Canzoneri, is prepared to press a campaign to have the Brooklyn youngster who conquered Bushey Graham Friday night in Madison Square Garden substitute for Graham in the bout on Jan. 7 in the Garden in which Charley (Phil) Rosenberg, world's bantamweight champion, will defend his title. Goldman yesterday announced his intention of appealing to the State Athletic Commission to replace the defeated Graham with Canzoneri, who, in the fifteen months he has been boxing professionally, has lost but one battle in thirty-four. Davey Abad, Panama battler, enjoys the distinction of having beaten Canzoneri.

That the commission will accede to Goldman's request, however, is unlikely, unless Chairman James A. Farley changes his mind on the subject or is overruled in committee. Chairman Farley, after Friday night's bout, announced there would be no change in the Rosenberg-Graham bout plans so far as the commission is concerned.

Graham returned immediately to Utica after Friday night's bout and will start an intensive training campaign for the approaching scrap with Rosenberg. Billy Barr, manager of the speedy up-State Italian, had no complaint to find with the decision against his idol, but in extenuation pointed to the fact that Graham was unable to do his best because of an injured hand which for a time, it was feared, would force a cancellation of last Friday's tilt.

ENTRY LIST GROWS FOR CHESS TOURNEY

Seven of Those Asked to Compete Here Have Agreed to Take Part.

CAPABLANCA ON WAY HOME

World's Champion Says He Will Do No Studying and Will Work Only for Physical Perfection.

Following a brief but successful exhibition tour of the Middle West, Jose R. Capablanca is now en route for his home in Havana, Cuba, where the world's champion chess player will spend the Christmas holidays with his family. Capablanca expects to be back in New York about Feb. 1 when he will complete his preparation for the international grandmasters tournament to start here on Feb. 26, in which he will be one of a field of six of the world's greatest players who will meet in a four-round competition.

In his tour of the Middle West, the champion engaged in four exhibitions, two in Cleveland and one each in Detroit and Chicago, and once again showed that he is close to his best championship form. Although meeting strong teams in all three cities, engaging, in all, 120 players in simultaneous play, he won all but thirteen of the games played. Ten of these were drawn and in only three contests was he forced to accept defeat.

Capablanca expects to do only a little over-the-board playing while on his visit to Cuba and even upon his return to New York he does not intend to do very much studying in preparation for the big international tournament. As a matter of fact, the champion, contrary to general belief, never has taken kindly to intensive study. Naturally gifted for the game, he is of the opinion that hard study, such as some would believe a chess champion must indulge in, tends to stunt his play.

Lets Others Study.

"Intensive book study and analytical work in connection with the thousands of variations in the opening," he says, "may be all right for those who like to do it, but that sort of work never appealed to me. All I want is to feel in good physical condition before an important tournament."

As a result, Capablanca's preparation for a big competition such as the one in which he will engage here next February is not very far different from the training of a boxer, although not quite so vigorous. He is an ardent tennis enthusiast and plays the game throughout the Summer months. During the Lake Hopatcong chess tournament last Summer, in which he was returned the winner, he spent all of his mornings on the tennis courts, leaving the study of chess technique and openings to his competitors.

Although he will have little occasion to play tennis between now and the time of the coming New York tournament, he nevertheless expects to get in plenty of outdoor work in order to put himself in tip top shape. Long walks, careful eating and plenty of rest are the chief preparatory measures the champion takes in equipping himself for important competition. Analytical study forms little part of his training, although he does put in some time looking over games annotated by prospective opponents with the idea of "getting their viewpoint."

The committee in charge of the New York tourney has now heard from all but three of the masters who have been invited either to play or to come here to be on a reserve list. Those who have accepted invitations actually to take part in the tourney are, in addition to Capablanca, Frank J. Marshall, the American champion; Aron Nimzowitsch of Denmark and Dr. Milan Vidmar of Yugoslavia.

Reserve Men Accept.

The three for the reserve list also have accepted. They are Richard Reti of Czechoslovakia, Dr. Tartakower and Rudolph Spielmann, both of Vienna. Reti and Dr. Tartakower, in addition to being ready to enter the play in case of emergency, also are coming as journalists to report the tournament for European papers.

The three yet to be heard from are Dr. Alexander Alekhine, E. D. Bogoljubow and Dr. Emanuel Lasker, for whose participation negotiations have just been opened.

Local chess followers are hoping they will be able to accept as all three are rated among the world's foremost players. Bogoljubow, winner of the Moscow tourney of 1925, has just been returned the victor in the Berlin tourney, and appears to be playing in better form than ever. Alekhine, who is believed to be on the seas returning from a visit to South America, is looked upon as a certain starter in the New York tourney.

GREENLEAF TO PREPARE FOR DEFENSE OF TITLE

World's Pocket Billiard Champion to Start Training for Rudolph Match—Other News.

Ralph Greenleaf, holder of the world's pocket billiard championship, will resume practice within a few days. He has had only one trial since the championship, which ended on Nov. 17, when he opposed Tommy Hueston at Dwyer's Broadway Academy the week before last. Greenleaf will be asked to defend his title in a 450-point match against Erwin Rudolph at Dwyer's Academy on the nights of Jan. 20, 21 and 22.

Greenleaf injured the third finger on his right hand in an automobile accident about a month ago and was forced to take a short rest. In the trial match with Hueston Greenleaf discovered that his game had not suffered in any way and he feels confident that he will keep the title. Greenleaf must keep in form, for under the new rules he must defend his title every sixty days.

Rudolph qualified as the first challenger by finishing second in the championship tourney. The next challenger will be Hueston, who won third money. Hueston will meet the Greenleaf-Rudolph winner before the end of March. The next challenger most likely will be Frank Taberski, the dethroned titleholder, and this match will be the last of the present season.

Charles C. Peterson, the billiard referee and fancy shot expert, who has been instructing and entertaining at the Hoppe Academy for the last two weeks, has left New York. He appeared in Baltimore yesterday and will be in Washington tomorrow, leaving on Tuesday for his home in St. Louis.

During his stay here Peterson held a special instruction tournament in which fourteen shots were used. The winner was Allen Curtis, who made the fourteen shots in sixteen tries. Seymour Kling won second prize with a score of seventeen, while A. Hess was third with eighteen shots.

When the twenty-fifth specialty show of the Pekingese Club of America is held at the Hotel Roosevelt on Jan. 24, W. H. Well of Lancashire, England, considered the leading European authority on the breed, will officiate as judge. His selection has pleased both novice owners and regular breeders, who are anxious to have him pass judgment on American-bred Pekingese as compared with the imported specimens.

The officers and members of the club's Bench Committee, which will offer its full classification with cash prizes in each class, are making particular efforts to assure both a representative and record-breaking entry.

Important club special events to be contested include the cups donated by the late James Gorden Bennett, the late J. P. Morgan, Elbridge Gerry Snow Jr. and Mrs. Michael M. van Beuren, the organization's President. George F. MALONEY WILL FACE PERSSON AT GARDEN

Slugging Match Expected on Wednesday in Heavyweight Show's Main Bout.

Whether Harry Persson, giant Swede, merits consideration as a heavyweight title prospect, is expected to be known Wednesday night, after his battle with Jim Maloney, scrappy Boston heavyweight, the feature of another of Promoter Tex Rickard's heavyweight elimination shows in Madison Square Garden. The men are slated for ten rounds on a card which holds three other ten-round battles.

The winner of the main contest is to tackle Jack Sharkey, conqueror of Harry Wills, in the Garden in February in the first of a series of qualifying ring trials Rickard plans for Sharkey to determine his qualifications as a prospective rival for Champion Gene Tunney in a bout planned for the Yankee Stadium next September.

Persson will enter the ring something of a doubtful quantity. He went up to Hartford recently and dropped a decision to Pat McCarthy of Boston, and confidence in his ability was lowered accordingly. In Maloney, Persson will face a dangerous hitter, tremendously strong, and a rip-tearing, plunging fighter who crowds his rival from bell to bell. It promises to be an intensely interesting battle in which one or the other will fall before ten rounds have been covered.

Monte Munn, Nebraska's fighting legislator, battles Knute Hansen, Minnesota Swede, in the ten-round semi-final. Munn is confronted with one of his most severe tests in this encounter. In the previous battles of the Nebraskan, competition has not been particularly keen, but the State Athletic Commission has decreed that Munn, in the future, must face more serious opposition and Wednesday night's contest is the first of his real tests. He is favored to win, but Hansen is a sturdy rival and may upset predictions.

Martin Burke, elongated New Orleans heavyweight, and Otto Von Porat, Norwegian, are to clash in a third ten-round battle. The first bout of ten rounds will bring together Georgie LaRocco, Fordham heavyweight, and George Bush, Southern aspirant.

Garcia and Snyder Ready.

MEETING IS CALLED FOR DOG FANCIERS

Shepherd Club to Take Up Important Changes in Constitution Here Tomorrow.

Members of the Shepherd Dog Club of America will hold a special meeting in the rooms of the American Kennel Club, at 221 Fourth Avenue, tomorrow night to decide upon some important constitutional changes. The amendments that will come up to be voted upon, all have reference to a new policy in the management of the affairs of the club. If these changes are made in the constitution it will mean the subsequent hiring of a paid executive head, not a member of the Board of Governors, who would devote all of his time to the interests of the club members.

The most important of the amendments provides for a change in the number and class of members. Under the new ruling the membership would be unlimited and would be divided into separate groups. These are sustaining members, regular members, associate members and honorary members. The dues of the first three classes would be $25, $10 and $5 respectively, while the honorary members would enjoy all privileges except voting and holding office without the payment of any dues. Associate members would have no vote.

The second week in February will be a busy time in New York dog circles. The Pomeranian specialty show takes place on Tuesday, Feb. 8, and it is followed by the collie specialty and the all-terrier specialty on Wednesday, while the remaining days, Feb. 10, 11 and 12, are taken up by the big Westminster Kennel Club Show in Madison Square Garden. The Newark Kennel Club will hold its annual all-breed fixture in Newark, N. J., on Monday, Feb. 14.

A recent estimated canine census of the United States, made by the Department of Agriculture, places the dog population in excess of 7,000,000 animals. No estimate of the monetary value, however, has been attempted, due to the wide range in class.

English dog fanciers are reported dissatisfied with the way championships are decided in Great Britain. The system now used requires that a dog becomes a champion after it has taken three challenge certificates. These certificates can be won only at those exhibits designated by the Shows' Committee of the Kennel Club. The Britons have contended always, that this is far superior to the point system as used in the United States. Over here a dog may win championship points at every recognized all-breed and specialty show. But dogs must be shown under different judges, and the points must include at least one three point show.

The present difficulty in England is said to be the allocation of challenge certificates. It is claimed that the South has been too greatly favored in the past, and that exhibitors from the North must either travel to these shows, or not win championships.

80 OUT AT N. Y. U. FOR TRACK SQU

INDOOR TRACK IS NEED

Work Is Handicapped Through L of Equipment, but Outlook Year Is Good.

With one of the largest squads New York University history out track and field practice, Coach Von Elling is facing the coming with some degree of confidence. most eighty candidates have appe the call for the indoor season will see the Violet team in action the middle of February. The schedule has not been completed, it is established that New York U versity will have dual meets with principal New York rivals and also enter teams in the meets of Millrose A. A. on Feb. 14 and the collegiate A. A. A. A. on Mar. 5.

While his squad is one of the ever turned out at the Heights tution, Von Elling has no small ahead of him, as many of the can dates are either novices or fresh Added to this difficulty is that of training facilities and the situation the New York University is more bright, despite the big squad and enthusiasm which Von Elling has gendered.

With poorer material and about same handicaps last year, however, N. Y. U. took three point victories. This season the razing of the gymnasium to make room for the Nich chemistry building has deprived meh of an indoor track. This has remedied to some extent by work out whenever opportunity offered a nearby armory, and by transforming the Ohio Field grand stand into a ning track.

As a nucleus for his varsity this season Von Elling has Pete White, a veteran and captain of team. John Miller, former captain, also eligible, as are Dick Halton and Fred Veit, veterans. Phil Edwards Von Elling's freshman star of a ago, is also shaping up well. Al Williams and Phil Schiff complete group around which Von Elling expects to build his team.

There is only one sprinter in group but the middle distances taken care of very well. White Williams are quarter milers. White has done the quarter in 50 4-5 seconds by Von Elling's own watch, who never gives the hard-trying candidate any the best of it. Halton, also Von Elling's watch, has done a mile 4:35, which is considered pretty going in any college. Veit and Edwards are half milers. The latter has done the half in 1:54 and Von Elling is confident that he can better this time under pressure. Schiff is also a quarter miler although he has not shown as much form as the others. Miller, the former captain, is the only sprinter in the lot and Von Elling has not decided on what distance he shall concentrate for him.

PENN BATTERY MEN TO START WORK SOO

Will Drill in New Indoor Stadium —Veteran Twirlers and Catchers Available.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 18.—With the opening of the new Palestra (Indoor stadium) at the University of Pennsylvania the first of January, baseball will get an earlier start than usual.

Coach Walter Carlos in a baseball rally held at Houston Hall a few days ago outlined plans for the 1927 campaign and urged all the candidates to sign up as early as possible. Not much work will be done until the basketball season is over, but the pitchers and catchers can get in daily drills in the meantime.

Philip Dechert manager of the nine, announced that a new batting net has been provided.

There will be at least four veteran catchers and three dependable pitchers. The receivers include Connell, Swits, Matthews and Davenport. Connell and Davenport were the varsity receivers last year, but Inkaswitz was unable to play on account of an injured ankle which he received in basketball in mid-season. Noble and Lorms of the freshman team will be available for varsity catching.

The pitching veterans include Foster Sanford Jr., Bib Bishop and Ted Knoblauch. Zip Long, captain and star of last year's team, who graduated, will be the new freshman coach. Sanford has been a consistent winner ever since he played with the freshman team two years ago. The son of the former Yale and Rutgers coach is a giant young right hander with a good curve ball and fine change of pace.

Bishop, the former Erasmus Hall curver, has been on the varsity squad for the last two years but has had very little chance to work regularly. Knoblauch is a seasoned lefthander. Hook Walker, substitute end on the football team, will get a chance to show his merit in the Spring. Johnny Shober, substitute halfback, also will be available.

From the freshman team come Pitchers Gruehler and O'Hara. O'Hara is a six footer and has a world of speed. First base material will include Rothalter and Magner, products of the freshman nine.

Veteran infielders show Pete Cole, the New York boy, who played at shortstop most of last season; Manch Goldblatt and Tashjian, who divided the second base assignment; Armstrong and Andy Thompson. Paul Becker of the freshman team of last year will make a strong bid for third base. Ray Walker and Vandergrift are other good sophomores available.

In the outfield Pennsylvania will have four veterans—Captain Paskert Fields, Treemper, Thomas and Deutsch. Sullivan, Paul Scull, the football dropkicking hero, and McDonald of the freshman nine will also try for outfield honors.

Thirty-two games, including a Southern trip during the Easter holidays, have been arranged with the customary Quadrangular Cup series with Columbia, Cornell and Dartmouth and special series with Yale and Harvard.

Cooper Signed for Coast Bout.

Farmer Joe Cooper, Terre Haute welterweight, is now heading Coastward. Cooper has been matched by his manager, Broadway Johnny Cox, to tackle Mushy Callahan in a ten-round battle in Los Angeles on Jan. 31.

GIRLS' BASKETBALL POPULAR AT N. Y. U.

Varsity Team Is Strong This Year With Reserve List of Almost Equal Ability.

With a larger and more experienced squad than last season, the New York University girls' basketball team looks forward to a successful season. Although one of the youngest sports at New York University, the game already has taken such a hold on the student body at Washington Square that Miss Carlston, coach of the team, was faced with one of her most difficult problems early in the season in having to select a varsity team.

Much good material remained from last season and many girls, attracted by the popularity of the game, came out for the team. The result was a keen contest for the six regular positions. In the first game of the season the Violet overwhelmed the girls' team from the New York Agricultural College. The score in this game was 60 to 9 and rapidly developed into little more than a hard workout for the local players.

Miss Theresa Guffanti, star guard, is captain of the team this year. Supporting her, as starters in the first game of the season, were the Misses Pearl Lichtenberg and Ida Metz as forwards. Miss Billie Williams was centre and Miss Anne Haber side centre. Miss Norma Carrara started as the other guard against the Aggies.

Before the game was over many of the Violet substitutes saw service. Among these were the Misses Florence Stone, Mildred Lindeblad, Maybelle Tamor, Babbette Steinler and Estelle Mascart. The girls scored 16 points in the first period against the Aggies and added 12 more in each of the following two quarters. It remained for the fourth period, however, for the Violet teamwork to reach its full strength. Then the local players tallied 20 points as against none for the Aggies.

OHIO STATE'S RECORD IN BIG TEN GOOD

Buckeye Statisticians Rank University Second in Football Period From 1913 to 1926.

Ohio State has the second best football record in the Big Ten, all games considered for the period of 1913-1926, according to figures compiled by Ohio State sports statisticians. This period is inclusive except for the "unofficial" campaign of 1918, and covers the time since Ohio State first entered the conference.

Michigan is ranked at the top, but the Wolverines were not in the conference from 1913 until 1918. On the basis of all games played from 1913 through 1926, excluding only 1918, the Buckeyes have a winning percentage of .730, having won 65, lost 24 and tied 8 games. Michigan during that period has won 79, lost 21 and tied 3 games for a percentage of .790.

Illinois elevens are ranked third with 65 games won, 25 lost and 6 tied. Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa and Chicago are bunched in the order named, with Indiana, Purdue and Northwestern the trailers.

According to the Ohio State statistician's figures, the Buckeyes boast the best record against non-Western Conference teams with 33 victories, 2 losses and 4 tie contest in a total of 39, for a percentage of .943. Wisconsin is second with a mark of .831, representing 37 victories, 2 defeats and 2 ties, closely followed by Illinois with an average of .833, the result of 25 victories and 3 losses. Michigan has a record of 52 victories, 11 defeats and 2 tie games against non-conference opponents.

NEW UTRECHT WINS STUYVESANT MEET

Stuyvesant High School. In the final for the event Tarakinsky finished fourth and Donald third.

Sims First in Hundred.

The hundred was won by Herbert Sims of Stuyvesant. This victory was one of the most popular of the night, as the galleries contained a majority of Stuyvesant rooters and they had seen many races and most of the prizes go to rival schools.

Sims, however, burned up the track to win his heats and the final in slashing style. He won the first heat in 10 4-5 seconds and his semi-final heat in 10 3-5 seconds. In the final he repeated his 10 3-5 performance and nosed out Bernard Robbins of George Washington H. S., who was second.

Another favorite shut out in a preliminary heat was Eddie (Tut) Hoctor, former De La Salle Institute track star and now running for the Devitt School of Washington, D. C. Hoctor competed in the quarter-mile race, which was won by John Trachy of Manual Training H. S.

Another Stuyvesant boy, heretofore an obscure athlete, who covered himself with glory was a youngster named Bernson, who won the novice running high jump. MEN'S TITLE TENNIS TO START FEB. 12

National Indoor Event Will Be Held at 7th Regiment—Tilden Is Out.

The men's national indoor tennis championship for 1927 will be held on Feb. 12 and the days following at the Seventh Regiment Armory in this city, according to the tentative schedule given out yesterday by the Sanction and Schedule Committee of the United States Lawn Tennis Association, of which Louis B. Dulley is the Chairman.

Last year France sent three members of its Davis Cup team to compete in the indoor tournament, and also in an international team match, and in spite of the fact that both William T. Tilden 2d and Vincent Richards were competing, Jeanl Borotra and Réné Lacoste reached the final round. Lacoste, who had beaten Richards, conquered Borotra, who had eliminated Tilden, in the final round, thus succeeding the Basque as the titleholder.

There is little likelihood that France will send its representatives to compete in the coming tournament, and neither Tilden nor Richards will be a contender. Richards is now playing professional tennis, while Tilden is planning to sail for the Riviera in January.

The women's indoor championship, which was won by Miss Elizabeth Ryan last year, will be held the week of March 14 at the Longwood covered courts, Boston.

Twenty tournaments for men and women are listed on the tentative schedule of the 1927 Southern season. MARA WANTS MALONEY.

Seeks to Buy Contract of Boston Boxer From Carroll.

Tim Mara, promoter of professional football, yesterday offered to buy the contract of Jim Maloney, Boston heavyweight, from Dan Carroll, manager of Maloney. It was learned that Mara, through his partner, Matty Frank, offered to purchase Carroll's interest for a sum said to be $100,000, with the stipulation that the deal be completed before Maloney enters the ring against Harry Persson Wednesday night in Madison Square Garden. Carroll, it is understood, expects to give Mara his answer tomorrow.

BUSY YEAR AHEAD FOR COLUMBIA MEN

Athletic Teams Will Find Plenty of Competition When Holidays Are Over.

Athletic activities at Columbia will be temporarily set aside following the Varsity-Alumni basketball game Wednesday night, as the Christmas vacation period starts Wednesday and ends Jan. 5. The Morningside campus will be practically deserted for two weeks, but following the vacation, all Winter sports will commence and, with the exception of the examination period late next month, there will be no let-up until the seasons close in March.

The basketball team will play Union College at the Columbia gym Jan. 3 in the first game following the vacation and on Jan. 8, Coach Dan Meenan will take his squad to Princeton for its opening game of the Eastern Intercollegiate League. Dartmouth will be the second League opponent, the game to be played at Hanover Jan. 12. Cornell comes to the Lion gym for the first local League game on Jan. 15 and following this, two games a week will be played until the season closes March 8.

Army and N. Y. U. are the only non-league teams that will be opposed after the Union game, Army being played at West Point Feb. 5 and N. Y. U. at Columbia Feb. 16.

With three opponents already met, the wrestling team enters upon a stiff schedule when it opposes Harvard at Cambridge Jan. 12. One match a week is booked for Coach Gus Peterson's matmen but the only major teams that will be seen at the Columbia gym are Syracuse, Cornell and M. I. T.

The varsity swimming season opens at the Columbia pool Jan. 12 with Wesleyan the opponent. Yale will be the second opponent for Coach Ed Kennedy's mermen, this meet to be held at New Haven Jan. 18. The freshman swimming team opposed Stuyvesant High School in the Columbia tank last Friday in the opening meet. The first meet following the holidays will be with Poly Prep at Columbia, Jan. 11.

Due to the fact that the freshman basketball candidates were not called out until last week, the first game for the yearlings will not be played until Jan. 11, when Stuyvesant High faces the Columbians at the Blue and White gym. The varsity fencing season opens with Pennsylvania here Feb. 5. Seven meets are scheduled before the Northern Division semi-finals are held March 18 and 19, to be followed by the finals March 31 and April 1.

SCORE TIED THREE TIMES

Half Ends at 22 to 18 and After Third Deadlock Clubmen Resort to Long Shots to Win.

Special to The New York Times.

MONTCLAIR, N. J., Dec. 18.—The New York University basketball team opened its season tonight at the Montclair Athletic Club and lost to the Montclair quintet, 45 to 33. After a first half in which the lead changed hands twice Montclair surged to the fore, and although the clubmen were tied once more they were never trailing.

In the first period the Violet opened with a rush and ran the score up to 11 to 2. Then Montclair brought the count to 11-all, and went ahead for the first time when Hynson netted the ball to make the count 13 to 11. Ready's woul tied the count at 15 to 15, but Montclair brought it up to 22 to 18 as the half ended.

In the second period, Warner, the N. Y. U. captain, knotted the score on a field and two foul goals. With the count 22 to 22, Montclair began long-range shooting, which predominated throughout the half. Through this medium the clubmen steadily increased their lead. Hiffenback, former N. Y. U. star, played with the Montclair team.

The Newark A. C. basketball team defeated the strong St. Lawrence University five last night on the Newark A. C. court, 25 to 21, in a keenly contested game. The St. Lawrence team the night before defeated the Crescent A. C. of Brooklyn in the latter's first defeat of the year, 37 to 32.

Newark started slowly and trailed by one point at the end of the first half, 11 to 10. In the second period, the Jersey team launched a strong offensive, borne mainly by Brogan and Bopp, and forged to the front. The Newark team held St. Lawrence to five field goals during the game, two of which were scored by Howe, a substitute.

The line-up:

NEWARK (25).		ST. LAWR'CE (21).

CORNELL FIVE READY FOR HOLIDAY TOUR

Ten Men Will Make Trip to Meet Ohio State and Other Opponents.

ITHACA, N. Y., Dec. 18.—A Cornell basketball squad of ten men has been selected by Coach Howard Ortner to make the Christmas holiday trip. The Ithacans will open their season with Colgate at Hamilton next Wednesday and will then disband until after Christmas.

At the end of the following week they will meet again in Columbus, Ohio, to play Ohio State and Wittenberg and will also take on Rochester and Buffalo before coming back to Ithaca for the reopening of the university.

The prospects for a strong team are none to bright at present, but Coach Ortner hopes that the experience of the trip will serve to develop more effective team play and that by the time the Intercollegiate League games begin Cornell will have a fairly strong outfit. So far team play is ragged, the tendency on the part of nearly all of the men being to play individually.

Most of last year's varsity squad were lost by graduation, including Frank Rosenwasser and Merrill Dake, veteran guard and centre respectively, and Ciucas and Moynihan, forwards. The only experienced players available are Theodore Schlossbach, guard and forward on last year's team; Arthur M. Winkler, a forward on the 1924-25 team, and T. C. Deveau, who played guard a little while last year and also the year before.

After Christmas Ignacio Molinet, powerful fullback on the football team and a member of the varsity court squad two years ago, is coming out to try for a forward position. His great strength makes it likely he will get into some of the games.

The scrimmages lately indicate that in the opening game Winkler and Lyman D. Hall, a substitute last year, will start at forwards; that E. A. Cobb of the freshman team last year and substitute guard on the varsity football team will play centre. He is 6 feet 3 inches in height and though weighing 200 is fast and agile.

Grange Plans Return to Movies.

BEAUMONT, Texas, Dec. 18 (AP).—Harold (Red) Grange will return to the movies, but only for the Winter, he said here today, commenting on reports that he would desert the gridiron for the silver screen. He intends to join his team again next Fall.

Three-Cornered Stretch Battle In Havana Feature Is Won by Caroline Carte

CAROLINE CARTER FIRST AT HAVANA

Juvenile Filly Wins Three-Cornered Stretch Battle in the Feature Dash.

CUT BUSH SETS THE PACE

Leader Loses the Place to Little Papoose by a Nose—Victor Is a 7-to-1 Shot.

Special to The New York Times.

HAVANA, Dec. 18.—The Shady Brook Farm's filly Caroline Carter triumphed over six other two-year-olds in the feature dash here today. Little Papoose and Caroline Carter trailed in the early stages but closed in on the peacemaker, Cut Bush, at the turn into the stretch and the three engaged in an exciting battle, Caroline Carter reaching the wire first by a slender margin. The winner received but slight support in the betting, her odds going from 6 to 7 to 1. Little Papoose shared favoritism with Foretold, both being held at 2 to 1.

Cut Bush, the rank outsider, showed plenty of speed in the early running but went very wild on the turn and tired in the closing strides, losing the place to Little Papoose by a nose.

Loreiel, Toller and Baalbeck II made a blanket finish of it in the third race, also at five and a half furlongs, Loreiel noised out Toller while the latter was only a neck in front of Baalbeck II at the finish. Loreiel was an 8-to-1 shot.

BACKBONE WILL TRAIN FOR $75,000 COFFROTH

Backbone, best of the handicap horses that carried the silks of Harry Payne Whitney this season, has arrived at Tijuana to train for the next Coffroth Handicap, which will be run Sunday, March 13, with an added money value of $75,000. He will race in the colors of F. D. Shea, wealthy brewer of Winnipeg, whose nom de course is Greenbriar Stable.

Shea's trainer, D. S. Mitchell, paid James Rowe $25,000 for Backbone at Bowie just before the running of the $10,000 Thanksgiving Handicap, with the understanding that the colt was to bear the familiar Eton blue jacket and brown cap in that gallop of a mile and three-sixteenths. Backbone, a four-year-old son of Whisk Broom II and Stamina, won gallantly, beating game little Peanuts, which had previously won the Bowie Cup at Pimlico.

Backbone was bred by Rowe for Whitney in Monmouth County, New Jersey, before Whitney moved his stud to Kentucky, retaining Brookdale Farm only as a training place. He is one of the best bred thoroughbreds that has gone to Tijuana in a quarter of a century.

Backbone did not distinguish himself as a two-year-old, but began his three-year-old career by winning the $10,000 Wood Stakes inaugural at Jamaica and next finished second to Coventry in the Preakness. He trained off after the Preakness and did not strike a winning gait again until last Summer. Good at both sprinting and distance running, Backbone should cut a big figure in Tijuana racing after he becomes acclimatised. The mile and a quarter gallop of the Coffroth will not terrify him.

RUTGERS LOSES CAPTAIN.

Football Injury Keeps Brown From Taking Part in Swimming.

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J., Dec. 18.—Prospects for an unbeaten swimming team at Rutgers received a severe setback when it was announced that in all probability Captain Al Brown would not be able to swim during the season because of an injury received in football. Brown, who was centre on the Scarlet eleven, wrenched his shoulder in the Lehigh game, but it was believed that it would heal before the first swimming meet with the Army on Feb. 5. The shoulder has not responded to treatment, however, and Brown is lost to the team.

He was one of the stars of the Rutgers natators for the past two years and in 1924 won the intercollegiate championship in the breast stroke. He holds the Rutgers record in this event and twice has won the Eastern Collegiate championship. His loss leaves George Young, who, with Brown, is a three-letter man, as the main Scarlet entry in the breast stroke.

The Rutgers swimming schedule is one of the hardest in years and includes meets with Swarthmore, Johns Hopkins and the Navy. Since the schedule was announced last week, two more dual contests have been arranged; with Lafayette at Easton on Feb. 9 and with Fordham at New Brunswick on Feb. 18.

MISS FENWICK IS VICTOR.

Takes Squash Racquets Title of England Second Year in Row.

Miss C. Fenwick won the ladies' squash racquets championship of England at the Queen's Club, West Kensington, recently, for the second consecutive time, a feat which has never before been accomplished. In the final match she defeated Miss N. Cave by three games to one, the scores being 4—9, 9—6, 9—2, 9—5. Another player, Miss J. Cave, has won the title twice, but not in consecutive years, her victories having been attained in 1922 and 1924. She was ur able to compete this year owing to an injured wrist.

Miss N. Cave has the extraordinary record of having been in every final since 1922, the year the competition was launched, her greatest success having been in 1922, when she won the title. This year she has not showed her best playing. Being short of practice, she did not seem fit to play a five-game match all out from start to finish. After having won two matches which went to five games, however, from her opponents on the two days before the final, Miss P. Blake and the Hon. Mrs. C. N. Bruce, Miss Cave appeared somewhat tired when she faced Miss Fenwick for the crown.

Miss Fenwick proved too strong and too fast for her opponent, who, however, showed a flash of her true form in the first game, which she won easily. The crisis of the match came when the score was 6—6 in the second game. Had Miss Cave won this game she might have taken the match, according to the critics. Miss Fenwick played grim, intensive squash racquets at the critical moment, and, after winning this game, went on without making a careless or haphazard stroke.

The Shoot at Jamaica Bay.

W. R. Simonson led a field of nine gunners yesterday at the Jamaica Bay traps of the Bergen Beach Gun Club. He took the High Scratch Cup with 92 out of a possible 100 targets. The shoot was excellent considering the bitter cold and the high wind which swept across the traps, making conditions trying.

R. E. Went had the high handicap gun.

LEHIGH SETS SWIM DATES.

Several Veterans Available for Hard Schedule This Season.

BETHLEHEM, Pa., Dec. 18.—When the Lehigh University swimming season opens the Brown and White mermen will face one of the most formidable schedules in years. The first meet is not scheduled until after the Christmas vacation, but in the meantime the tankmen are busy in intramural competition, with medals for first, second and third-place the incentive.

Foremost of Lehigh's swimmers are the veterans of last year, including Captain Al Raleigh, Wynn and Harman, sprint men; Leader, the breast and back stroke entry, and Hobbs, a diver.

The schedule, which opens on Jan. 15, follows:

Jan. 15, Navy, away.
Jan. 22, Lafayette, at home.
Feb. 12, Rutgers, away.
Feb. 19, Catholic University, at home.
March 5, Swarthmore, at home.
March 12, Cornell, at home.
March 19, Intercollegiates, at Lafayette.

RULES ON DRISCOLL'S WILL.

English Court Decides Gift to Boxer Goes to His Family.

Justice Eve, in the Chancery Division in London, was asked recently to decide a question arising out of the will of James Driscoll, one of England's leading fighters. On his retirement from the ring, counsel said, Driscoll's admirers subscribed a sum of £3,750, and a deed was executed. Driscoll appointed by the will Tommy Burns, the former heavyweight champion of the world, as the principal executor. The Justice decided that the sum in question was held in trust for Driscoll, and that under the will his widow and child should get the £3,750.

GOLF DATE IS SHIFTED.

British Ladies' Championship Will Start May 16 Instead of May 23.

It is announced by the Ladies' Golf Union of England that, by permission of the Royal County Down Club of Newcastle, Ireland, the date of the British ladies' championship has been altered to the week beginning May 16, 1927, at Newcastle. This change has been taken to avoid a clash with the open amateur championship, which is fixed for May 23, the date originally selected for the ladies' event.

New Rochelle High School Team, Which Plays in Florida on Saturday.

Wolkenten, R. E.; Denny (Capt.), R. T.; Abrams, R. G.; Marsland, Centre; Greene, L. G.; Giangreco, L. T.; Hinman, L. E.; Valery, L. H. B.; Hartrey, R. H. B.; Morton, F. B., and Fairweather, Q. B.

NEW ROCHELLE HIGH IS READY FOR TRIP

Unbeaten Eleven to Leave on Tuesday for Two Post-Season Games in Florida.

The New Rochelle High School football team, which was undefeated during the past season and which held the opposition scoreless, will play two games in the South within the next two weeks. The first post-season fray will take place on Christmas afternoon at Tampa, Fla., and the second will be held at Orlando, Fla., on New Year's Day.

In the first of these clashes the Northern high school will meet the Florida State champion, the Hillsborough High School. The second encounter will be with the East Coast champions, the Orlando High School. Hillsborough is undefeated this year while Orlando has dropped only one game. This lone defeat was at the hands of the Hillsborough aggregation in the game for the Florida title.

New Rochelle will depart for the South Tuesday. Coach McKenna and the regulars will make the trip in addition to a suitable number of substitutes. The first team probably will line up with Wolkensten and Hinman, ends; Captain Denny and Giangreco, tackles; Abrams and Greene, guards; Marsland, centre; Fairweather, quarterback; Valery and Hartrey, halfbacks, and Morton, fullback.

NEW MAT STAR FOR LEHIGH.

Lehr Expected to Shine in Light-Heavyweight Class.

BETHLEHEM, Pa., Dec. 18.—While a scarcity of heavyweight candidates is apparent in the wrestling squad at Lehigh University, the outlook of the season is by no means discouraging, with competition keen and liberal for each of the other classes. Lehigh will have only two veterans of last season in James Reed, captain and intercollegiate 115 pounder, and William Heilman, 145-pound letter man, but the freshman team of last year contributed some excellent prospects.

Of the latter Andy Lehr of Ridgewood, L. I., looms as the most promising. Barring injury, he should be one of Lehigh's best 175-pounders in recent years. Recently Lehr competed in the light-heavyweight wrestling tournament conducted by the New York A. C. and against a field of half a dozen selected wrestlers won first honors.

N. Y. U. SWIMMERS BUSY.

Candidates Work Hard With Opening of Season Near.

With the start of the season only about two weeks off the New York University swimming team is rapidly rounding into shape. Coach Frank P. Wall has been working the candidates out at the Bronx-Union Y. M. C. A. pool three days a week and expects a successful season despite the fact that much of the material is for the sprints and little of it for diving, backstroke or breaststroke swimming.

Eight meets are on the schedule this season, the first of them being against Union on Jan. 7. As all but one of the meets will be contested away from home and as swimming is a comparatively new sport at New York University, the task which faces Coach Wall can be realized. Other teams to meet the Violet this season will be Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute, Swarthmore, Lafayette, Army, Williams, Fordham and C. C. N. Y. The Williams meet is the one which will be held in the Bronx-Union pool.

To meet this formidable schedule Coach Wall has a little squad of veterans and a number of new men, several of whom are novices in competitive swimming. Several of these newcomers are very promising, but new candidates will be welcomed. The sprint distances are the best provided for this season because three of the star members of last year's team are back at N. Y. U.

RUTGERS IMPROVES PLANT.

Football, Showing Profit, Enables Underwriters to Add to Field.

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J., Dec. 18.—The Board of Football Underwriters of Rutgers University has given over $57,000 for permanent improvements to the athletic plant of the institution in the past twelve years, according to a report made public today. The underwriters, who were organized in 1914 by L. F. Loree, of the Class of 1877, annually subscribe several thousand dollars to insure the football season against loss. When the season is successful financially, one-half of the subscriptions are not called for, but the other half is spent in improving the Neilson Athletic Field.

During the past decade the underwriters' fund has paid for the erection of a field house at a cost of more than $11,000, the purchase of 5,000 removable bleacher seats and other improvements including the equipment of training quarters in the Hegeman Dormitory at a cost of over $5,000. It is announced that receipts during the past football season were $45,683.74 and the expenditures $35,967.62, leaving a profit of $9,716.12. Since 1914, with the omission of one year, Rutgers football has made a profit of $41,158.77.

BRITISH DEPLORE GOLF DATE CONFLICT

CALL IT UNFORTUNATE

Believe Weather Conditions Here Prompted Action — Some Doubt Its Sincerity.

By WILLIAM D. RICHARDSON.

The action taken by the Executive Committee of the U. S. G. A. some time ago fixing the date of the United States open championship in the same week as the British open has stirred up much comment on the other side. A recent issue of Golf Illustrated, a London weekly devoted to golf and edited by Harold Hilton, leads off with an article headed "The Calamitous Clash of Dates," and likewise presents the views of William Park, its Scottish correspondent, who is especially concerned, inasmuch as the decision is bound to affect next year's championship at St. Andrews.

Judging by the tenor of one of the articles, the British are inclined to think the U. S. G. A. was only fooling when it brought about the conflict in dates. Park, for instance, seems to think that the U. S. G. A. took no such action and that the whole thing was conjured up in the imagination of some American writer.

Hilton More Serious.

Hilton, on the other hand, views the matter with more seriousness and winds up with the assertion that since the third week in June always has been set aside for the British open, it is unreasonable even to suggest that the R. and A. move the date forward so as to bring the United States open up into a more favorable period of the year.

Inasmuch as the two articles indicate the attitude of the British golfing public in a matter that is of such importance at the present time and seek to place the blame for the conflict on the U. S. G. A., portions of them are reprinted.

"Amid many rumors and counter-rumors the fact seems to emerge that the American ruling body has definitely decided to bring forward the American open dates coincident with those on which the British event will be decided," one begins. "To say that the British golfing public is astonished at the decision is to put it mildly; it is an astonishingly regrettable one.

"In an interview Mr. Boase (Norman Boase, Chairman of the Championship Committee of the Royal and Ancient Club) has stated that, in his opinion, 'the American idea was that July was too hot for holding the biggest competition of the year, and he does not believe that any difference of opinion between the United States Golf Association and the Royal and Ancient Golf Club existed when the action was taken. At the same time, he added, it was most unfortunate. The British open championship was the premier championship, and if the American authorities wished American amateurs and professionals to compete in it, it was for them to avoid the British date, as they have done hitherto.'

Calls Incident Regrettable.

"The United States Golf Association is, of course, quite at liberty to pick whatever dates it chooses for its premier event, and the state of the thermometer is not altogether a negligible consideration. But, even allowing for this, it is none the less regrettable that the U. S. G. A. has chosen the precise week during which our own open will be decided. We think that at all costs such an unfortunate clash should have been averted. It is true that the weather was very hot at Scioto last July, but it did not prevent Bobby Jones from winning the title—notwithstanding a hurried scamper across the Atlantic after securing our own open at Lytham and St. Annes less than three weeks before. It seems that the best man came out on top—as he always will in a true test, be the conditions hot or cold, fair or foul.

"The decision most certainly will be highly unpopular among the leading American professionals, for their successes during recent years have made them realize that the winning of the British open championship is of far greater value, commercially, than the winning of the American open, important though the latter undoubtedly is. Unless our knowledge of psychology is entirely erroneous, we anticipate a long and sustained chorus of disapprobation on the part of the American professionals. It also will be interesting to see if any of them compete at St. Andrews next June in preference to the open championship of their own country."

PENN STATE TEAMS REST.

Wrestlers and Boxers to Stay In Training Over Holidays.

STATE COLLEGE, Pa., Dec. 18.—After three weeks of steady conditioning work, Pennsylvania State College boxers and wrestlers have left for their Christmas vacation, during which they have promised to continue training.

Less than three weeks after the wrestlers return from the holiday they will hold their first meeting with the new coach, Charles Speidel, former United States Olympic star and New Jersey State champion in the 158-pound class. Speidel was appointed wrestling mentor this week to succeed E. G. Leonard, who went to Michigan State College in the Fall.

Four Penn State football stars have been chosen to make the trip to California with the Eastern eleven that will play a charity game in San Francisco on New Year's Day. They are Ken Weston, end; Jack Friel, tackle, and Bill Pritchard and George Grenell, backs.

Hockey Players Will Start a Busy Week at the Garden With Tonight's Gam

RANGERS TO PLAY IN GARDEN TONIGHT

Will Tackle Detroit Six in First of Several Important Games Here This Week.

ST. PATS DUE TOMORROW

Will Face Americans, and Pirates Make Debut Tuesday—Amateurs in Action Saturday.

Another active week in local hockey circles begins tonight at Madison Square Garden where the New York Rangers are to meet the Detroit Cougars. Four more National Hockey League games of more than ordinary interest are on the program for the immediate future, the climax being reached, so far as metropolitan fans are concerned, with the game a week from tonight between the Rangers and the Americans—the first combat between the local sextets.

In the other pro games of the week the New York Americans will meet the rejuvenated St. Pats of Toronto tomorrow night; the Rangers will cross sticks with the Pittsburgh Pirates Tuesday night and the same team will clash with Manager Lalonde's Americans on Thursday night. The Americans recently traded Charley Langlois, a defense man, for Lionel Conacher, also a defense expert, and this ought to brighten up the rivalry between the teams a lot.

Altogether there ought to be plenty of hockey for everybody during the week. The Metropolitan Amateur League, which opened its season with some very good hockey at Madison Square Garden on Wednesday night, will step into the picture once more with another triple-header on Christmas night. On this program the Crescent A. C. will start against the new Canadian Club team; the New York A. C. and St. Nicholas will have it out in the second game and in the final clash the Knickerbockers will try conclusions with the new Seventh Regiment sextet.

As an additional attraction for the Garden rink there will be an encounter Tuesday afternoon between the Princeton freshmen and the St. Paul's School sextet. The game will be played for the benefit of the press and sports boys of the Cathedral of St. John fund, and also as a memorial to Hobey Baker, who starred at St. Paul's and at Princeton was the greatest college player the sport has had in this country.

Cougars Here on First Visit.

New York fans will have a chance tonight to view the activities of the speedy Detroit Cougars for the first time. The Cougars, made up in the main from the famous Victoria team of that name, are led by Art Duncan, a veteran of Colonel Bishop's famed Canadian flying corps in the World War and a hockey defense player of considerable note. Under Duncan's direction the Cougars have made an enviable record so far this season, and recently took the high-flying Ottawa Senators into camp for their first defeat of the season.

Not only that, but the Cougars went so far as to shut out our own Rangers the last time Lester Patrick and his young men visited Detroit. That game was a tight fit, 1-0, for the Cougars, and now the Rangers are out for revenge and want to reverse that score, only more so. They will be opposed by some crack players, however, and will have to put on lots of speed.

The green-jacketed St. Pats of Toronto, who will battle it out with the Americans tomorrow night, are said to be moving with much more celerity than they did last year. They have played some bang-up games this season and have a tie with Ottawa as something to write home about. The Americans, however, defeated them in an air-tight contest at Toronto in their first meeting of the year.

Pirates Due Tuesday.

The Pittsburgh Pirates, led once more by the redoubtable Odie Cleghorn, will be on deck Tuesday night, when they also will make their season's début at the Garden against the Rangers. The Pirates are bringing a husky and also fast combination eastward and the game should be played at a rapid fire pace. The Pittsburghers will remain over for the game against the Americans on Thursday night.

The Americans, it is believed, have been strengthened by the trade which gave them Conacher for Langlois. Both Conacher, known as one of the crack defense men of the league, and Langlois probably will be in tomorrow night's line-up when the Americans and Pirates clash for the first time this season on local ice, although Lalonde may start Reise and Simpson on the defense and use Conacher to relieve them alternately.

Himes and Scott of the younger set on the Americans have also made a very good impression in the games here so far, and Himes may start on the forward line in place of McKinnon, who has been suffering from a bad shoulder, which was not helped any by the Ottawa game. Red Green and Burch are in good shape, but Shorty Green still is favoring a bad ankle.

Stars of Some of the Hockey Teams That Play in Garden This Week.

GALICIA TEAM PLAYS TODAY.

Will Meet First Germans in International Soccer League.

Six of the eight clubs in the International Soccer League will go into action on fields in the metropolitan area this afternoon. One of the most interesting battles probably will be found in the engagement between the Galicia club and the First Germans. Galicia is setting the pace in the league, but the Germans are coming along at a steady rate and experts expect them to give the leaders more than a little trouble.

The Caipe Americans, who are tied for second place in the league table, will meet the Brooklyn Americans at Steinway Oval in Astoria. The Brooklyn eleven is in second place with its rival so this battle should be one of the most closely contested and thrilling in the league. A victory will mean a great deal, and, with the possible defeat of the Galicians, the league race will be as open as the start of the season.

In the only other league match among these amateur clubs the Norwegians will oppose the Hakoah A. C. at Ulmer Park in Brooklyn. The game between Galicia and the First Germans will take place at Ridgewood Field in Brooklyn. All contests will start at 2:30 o'clock.

MANY GAMES TODAY FOR STATE ELEVENS

Amateur Soccer Teams Here and in Westchester Listed for Interesting Contests.

A heavy array of games is listed for this afternoon in the New York State Soccer League, with the Westchester and metropolitan districts coming in for their share of major attractions.

The Long Island Railroad eleven, which is leading the metropolitan section of the league by 5 points, is in for a hard battle at Hollis, L. I., when it faces the Brooklyn Edison club.

In Westchester the Danersk Club, setting the pace by a single point over the Yonkers St. George eleven, will face White Plains, the cellar team, while their rivals for first place will go into action against Port Chester, which gives every indication of making the game at least a tie.

The schedule for this afternoon, all games starting at 2:30:

Red Men A. C. vs. Viking A. C. at Curtis Field, Staten Island; Clan Scott F. C. vs. I. R. T. Strollers at Community Stadium, Jamaica, L. I.; Long Island R. R. vs. Brooklyn Edison F. C. at Hollis, L. I.; Swedish F. C. B. vs. Westbury F. C. at Commercial Field, Brooklyn.

Yonkers St. George vs. Port Chester F. C. at Glen Park, Yonkers; Otis Elevator A. A. vs. Greenwich F. C. at Ludlow Field, Yonkers; White Plains F. C. vs. Danersk F. C. at White Plains; New Rochelle F. C. vs. Tarrytown Camerons at New Rochelle; Stamford F. C. vs. Mamaroneck F. C. at Stamford, Conn.

Chess Prize to Howell.

C. S. Howell was the winner of first prize in the weekly rapid transit tournament at the Marshall Chess Club, with a score of 8 to 2. The other prize winners were H. Helms, 7½ to 2½; M. D. Hago, 6½ to 3½; Q. J. Brown, 6 to 4; A. J. McClure and C. Rasis, each 5½ to 4½.

BETHLEHEM ELEVEN PLAYS HERE TODAY

National Soccer Champions Will Face Indiana in American League Game.

In the American Soccer League, two important games will be played in Greater New York this afternoon. In the leading attraction, the Indiana Flooring eleven will face Bethlehem, the league leader and national champion, while over in Brooklyn at Hawthorne Field, the Wanderers will go into action against Fall River. Both games will start at 2:30, the Floormen playing on their home field, Indiana Oval in the Bronx.

Only two other league attractions are listed for this afternoon. In one Providence will act as host to J. and P. Coats and in the other the New York Giants will invade Newark. The Giants are well ahead of their rivals in the league standing and ought to win this afternoon, but Newark has a habit of upsetting champions and the Giants well may expect close going.

Indiana faces a hard task in trying to upset the league leaders, who have been traveling at a blistering pace since the opening of the season. The Bethlehem line-up has undergone only minor changes and the men cooperate so well in their fast passing attack that so far most of the opposition has been helpless before their brilliant footwork.

New Yorkers Strong.

The New Yorkers have been improving with each game and it is hard to say that they will enter this afternoon's fray at any odds shorter than even choice. Their attack is just about as effective as that of the steelmakers, and on the defense they are a hard team to get around. The battle ought to provide all the thrills possible.

Indiana already holds a victory over Bethlehem and has held the champions to a draw in their only other meeting, so they have at least an even chance of gaining two points in the standing at the expense of the invaders. Bethlehem may be without the services of Archie Stark, leading goal scorer last year, but the club's reserve list boasts of men of almost equal ability, so it really has little to worry about so far as the absence of Stark is concerned. In their last twenty-one games they have lost only three—to Boston, Fall River and their opponents of today.

The probable line-up:

INDIANA.		BETHLEHEM.
Brown	G.	Edwards
Clark	R.B.	Allen
Donald	L.B.	Barrie
Chatton	R.H.	McDonald
Terris	C.H.	Carnihan
McIntosh	L.H.	McGregor
Gallagher	O.R.	Jaap
Carlson	I.R.	Granger
Leonard	C.	Gillespie
Millar	I.L.	Rollo
McGhee	O.L.	Goldie

Brooklyn's Hopes High.

With two new men in the line-up this afternoon, the Wanderers think they will down Fall River, seeking its fourth consecutive pennant in the league. Kelly, who formerly played for Indiana, will be the new centre half and Adair, who previously has worn a Wanderer uniform, will be right outside. These men are expected to knit the front line into a unit, with the result that the scoring punch, which has been lacking, will be supplied.

Neufeld, the regular right outside, still has his knee in a cast and it is unlikely that he will return to the line-up for another week, although there is the remote chance that he will perform for a short time this afternoon.

The probable line-up:

BROOKLYN.		FALL RIVER.
Smith	G.	Blair
Gross	R.F.	Martin
Wilson	L.F.	Gibson
Drucker	R.H.	McPherson
Kelly	C.H.	Hyslop
Morris	L.H.	Coyle
Adair	R.O.	Campbell
Konrad	R.I.	Croft
Lyell	C.	Patterson
Eisenhoffer	L.I.	White
Yule	L.O.	McEachern

COLGATE LACROSSE BOOMS.

Admittance to Association Seen as Big Step Forward.

HAMILTON, N. Y., Dec. 18.—Colgate has moved up another notch by reason of her admittance to membership in the American Intercollegiate Lacrosse Association recently. This association consists of eighteen college and university teams, from which each year a championship twelve is picked.

Membership in this league is a real step forward in Colgate lacrosse and places the Maroon team on a much better standing, according to Lieut. Col. James Ballantine, coach of the Colgate team. It means that Colgate will meet only league opponents in the future. Syracuse, Cornell and Hobart are the other members of the association from this region who have been met before and they will all be retained on the schedule this year.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Dec. 18 (AP).—The Providence Club of the American Soccer League was sold today to Alexander Anderson and Richard Haworth, Providence factory heads, by a group of Fall River men who have been in control of the franchise.

The new owners announced immediately after the completion of the purchase that Manager Sam Fletcher had been rethined and authorized to buy first-class players to strengthen the team. New capital has been invested in the club and a lease on Kinsley Park was renewed this afternoon.

Club Wins, but Disbands.

DURHAM, N. C., Dec. 18 (AP).—The winning of the Piedmont Baseball League Championship last season did not prove a money-making proposition for the Greensboro, N. C., club, which was abandoned today because of failure to raise funds for the franchise deposit.

Crescent A. C. Soccer Called Off.

The soccer game between the Crescent A. C. and the Montclair A. C. scheduled for the Half-Mooners' field yesterday afternoon was cancelled on account of snow, which covered the field.

3 CITIES TO ENTER IN BOWLING LEAGUE

Philadelphia, Buffalo and Brooklyn Want to Join the New National Circuit.

The operation of the National Bowling League, a proposed eight-city circuit, now seems assured, it was announced yesterday by Frank A. Dwyer, promoter of the circuit. Philadelphia, Buffalo and Brooklyn bowling men already have announced their willingness to join, while similar replies, it was said, are expected from Newark, Utica, Syracuse and Rochester. The eighth franchise holder will be Dwyer's Broadway Academy, which will represent Manhattan.

The first announcement was made a week ago and came as a surprise. There are many strong league teams in the metropolitan district, and no difficulty is expected in recruiting one to represent Manhattan. The other cities boast some excellent bowling material, and the competition is certain to be keen.

In the event the remaining four cities accept the invitations to enter, a meeting of representatives of the various prospective franchise holders will be held here within the next two weeks. It now is the plan of the promoters to draft a schedule and have the league in operation before Feb. 1.

Senators and Vogler will stage a Lincoln Day Sweepstakes at their Walton Bowling Alleys, 84 East 167th Street. Play will start on the afternoon of Feb. 12 and will continue the next day. An entry list of at least seventy-five is expected. The first prize will be $250.

John J. Boylan, owner of the Boylan Recreation Bowling Alleys, 48 West Burnside Avenue, the Bronx, has just completed one of the most important bowling events ever bowled in the Bronx. The Boylan's Individual Bowling Championship Tournament, in which seventy-five star bowlers in Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Connecticut and New York competed for $1,000 in prizes. First honors in the individual event went to Joe Porto of New Haven, Conn. Billie Knox of Philadelphia was second and Mike Shirghio of Port Chester, N. Y., third.

On Jan. 22 and 23 Boylan will conduct a sweepstakes at his academy for a five-man team. The contest is limited to eighteen teams. The entries close on Jan. 20.

Barney Spinella's five still is on top in the American National Bowling tournament at Thum's alleys. Out of eighteen games rolled Spinella's bowlers have won fifteen games. Manhattans are in second place with fourteen won and four lost, and Metropolitan is third with sixteen won and five lost. The Rural New Yorkers are in the lead for the prize for the highest three games (one series) with 3,113. The Sparton Club holds high team score for one game with 1,099, and also leads for the prize offered for the high team score out of the money with 1,099. Andy Hiltenbrand of the Rural New Yorkers has the three-game record (one series) with 749. He also holds the high individual score record with 278.

Cordes & Coyle have arranged a benefit bowling carnival for this evening at their bowling academy, 543 West 145th Street. The first attraction will be a contest between Ray Nolen, leader in the Greater New York individual championship, and Billie Fox, one of the runners-up in the tournament.

Billie Cordes, manager of the Metropolitan Bowling Alleys, Washington Heights, announces that starting Jan. 2 and continuing every Sunday thereafter an amateur sweepstakes will be held at the Metropolitan Academy.

BOSTON, Dec. 18 (AP).—The Boston Bruins improved their position in the National Hockey League standing by defeating the Pittsburgh Pirates, 3 to 0, here tonight.

Boston got the jump in the first two minutes of play when Cooper beat the Pittsburgh goalie. Keats added ano her in the same period and midway of the second Cooper netted his second tally. The Pirates were on the defensive throughout and only the great work of Worters in goal served to keep the score down.

AWARD MEDALS FOR FINEST BUILDINGS

Premier Honor by Fifth Avenue Association Goes to the Aeolian Structure.

FIFTH AVENUE IS SECOND

Committee Deplores Lack of Good Architectural Treatment in Majority of Cases.

Gold and silver medals were awarded by the Fifth Avenue Association for the best new and altered buildings erected in the Fifth Avenue section during the past year at its annual dinner last Thursday night.

The awards are based upon investigation of all new buildings and alterations completed in the section during the year, based on a study by a committee of its members and architects selected by the Fifth Avenue Association and the New York Chapter of the American Institute of Architects. Acting members were Waldron P. Belknap, Samuel Kaufman and C. Stanley Taylor. The architect members were Joseph H. Freedlander, Leon N. Gillette and Harry Creighton Ingalls.

The first prize for new buildings—a gold medal and diploma—was awarded to the Gould Realty Company for the new Aeolian Building at 689 and 691 Fifth Avenue, the northeast corner of Fifty-fourth Street, which is to be sold at public auction by Joseph P. Day on Jan. 24 and a certificate was granted to the architects, Warren & Wetmore.

The Aeolian Building was called a graceful addition to the music and art centre which dominates the development of upper Fifth Avenue in the neighborhood of Fifty-seventh Street. Every effort was made by the architects to design a structure in keeping with the traditions of the company.

Aeolian Building Features.

The building is fourteen stories high, on a plot 99 by 125 feet, designed in the French Renaissance style, with setbacks, and the whole surmounted by a sloping roof terminating in a lantern finial. The façades are buff Indiana limestone with pink granite base and old Convent Italian marble panels and trims, and limestone cornices balustrades and finials. The entrance doorways and display windows on the ground floor are cast bronze, and the window frames and sash are bronze throughout. The pent house tower is faced with architectural terra cotta matching the limestone, and a decorative touch is added by the tower roof and lantern finial which are copper decorated with gold leaf.

The second prize for new buildings was awarded to the 1 Park Avenue Corporation, owners of the building known as 1 Park Avenue. They received a silver medal and diploma, and a certificate of award was presented to the architects, York and Sawyer.

The building is an eighteen-story commercial structure, carried out in a dignified and substantial style characteristic of the Romanesque architecture found in Northern Italy. The exterior is of variegated buff brick with a limestone base four stories high and stone trimmings. The building is 197 feet 6 inches on Fourth Avenue and 200 feet on Thirty-second and Thirty-third Streets, with a private street 50 feet wide in the rear.

The committee was influenced in the award not alone by the architectural character of the building, but by the fact that its erection in the section of the city was a distinct contribution toward the improvement of its architecture and commercial character, and that this influence merited recognition above many other buildings which had not only failed to influence for the better the architecture of the area in which they were located, but which had also failed to take, in many cases, proper advantage of their location and surroundings. The building, which is owned by the Gould Estate, is to be sold at public auction by Joseph P. Day on Jan. 24.

GOLF CLUB ACQUIRES FIVE LARGE TRACTS

Bronxville Association Plans to Develop Westchester Property as Semi-Public Links.

The Bronxville Golf Association has purchased five parcels comprising 627 acres in the vicinity of White Plains.

The properties are the old Collins farm on Purchase Street, Harrison, N. Y., adjoining the Century and Progress Clubs. The tract consists of 134 acres and was purchased from the Purling Brook Land Company; the Eckardt farm in Northcastle near Chappaqua and overlooking the Kensico Reservior, comprising 146 acres, bought from the Waldick Corporation; the old Griffin farm near King Street, Greenwich, Conn., 180 acres, two miles from the Progress and Century courses, bought from H. & S. Sonn, Inc.; ninety-one acres on Harrison Avenue, Harrison, adjoining the Century Club, and the Collins estate and opposite the estate of Arthur Lehman, bought from Elgin H. Mott, and seventy-three acres on Kensico Road in Valhalla, purchased from John J. Dietz, Commissioner of Water Supply.

Jesse Winburn, banker, who is President of the association, said that the property brought more than $3,000,000. An appropriation of $1,500,000 has been made for buildings and other improvements. The total investment will be well in excess of $5,000,000, according to an official announcement.

The properties were bought through the offices of R. Franklin Hull, White Plains realtors in association with George R. Bruce of Larchmont. Henry C. Hull negotiated the sales. Frank Teets, Secretary of the golf association and Clarence DeWitt Rogers, attorney, acted for the association in buying the properties, all of which were purchased during the past four weeks.

Thomas Winton, golf course architect, has been retained to design the courses. Work is to be started next week, and it is intended that some of the courses be ready for use next Summer.

Willie Macfarlane, former American open champion, has been named as a director of the association.

The courses will be the first semi-public links in Westchester County. With the acquisition of the five parcels of land, the Bronxville Golf Association has gained control of most of the land now available for courses in Westchester County, its officials assert.

MULTIPLE LISTING GROWS.

235 Cities Use the System Now, Survey Shows.

Two hundred and thirty-five cities are now operating a multiple listing system, an increase of 18 per cent. in the last year, according to a report made by the National Association of Real Estate Boards to Frank H. Tyler, Chairman of the Board of Governors of the Multiple Listing Bureau. This phenomenal increase in the number of cities adopting multiple listing indicates that within a few years the majority of cities throughout the country will use this modern method of buying and selling, is Mr. Tyler's prediction.

"The exclusive contract to sell property, on which the principle of multiple listing is founded, has proved to be of mutual value to owners and brokers in obtaining quick and satisfactory results," declared Mr. Tyler, in contrasting the exclusive listing with the older and more familiar type of general listings.

"When a multiple listing system was first suggested in this city, the majority of brokers were skeptical that owners would 'tie up their property,' as they termed it, by an exclusive contract. But experience has proved the contrary—that rather than 'tieing up' the property, the exclusive contract gives a decided impetus toward the sale because it inspires the broker holding such a contract to devote every possible energy toward making a sale on account of the extra inducement such a sole agency affords him. He has the cooperation of the owner and the cooperation instead of the competition of his fellow-members."

FEW VACANCIES IN EAST SIDE HOUSES

Unoccupied Suites in Modern Apartments Represent Practically 3 Per Cent.

Following its recent survey of apartment renting conditions on Fifth and Park Avenues the Apartment Department of the Albert B. Ashforth firm has concluded a similar survey in the crosstown streets north of Thirty-fourth Street. William A. Ziegler, manager of that department, states that 175 vacancies were found on Fifth Avenue, representing 14 per cent. of the 1,300 available suites. Since that time twenty-eight have been rented, reducing the existing vacancies to 11.3 per cent.

"The survey of Park Avenue made four weeks ago," adds Mr. Ziegler, "showed 338 vacancies out of 3,220 apartments, or 11.5 per cent. During the last four weeks fifty-six apartments on this avenue have been rented, making the present percentage of vacancies but 8.7.

"In the street survey just concluded there are listed in the Murray Hill section, between Thirty-fourth and Fortieth Streets, thirteen modern elevator buildings, twelve of which were completed prior to 1925 and one completed this year. In these twelve buildings there are 417 apartments, of which twenty, or 4.8 per cent., are vacant at the present time. The sixty-six apartments in the 1926 building are all rented, bringing the percentage of vacancies in the Murray Hill section to 4 at present.

"In the section, between Forty-eighth and Eighty-fifth Streets, it is stated, we found 95 modern elevator buildings. Of these, 77 were completed prior to 1925. In the latter there are 2,290 apartment, of which 120, or 5.2 per cent., are vacant at the present time. The rental value of these vacancies is $284,720, or 3.3 per cent. of the total rental value of $8,570,000.

"In 1925 there were eleven buildings completed in this midtown section, containing 395 apartments. Only 12, or 3 per cent., of these are now vacant. In 1926 seven buildings were finished for occupancy. They contained 262 apartments. At this time 35, or 13.4 per cent., are vacant.

"In the midtown section, then, we found a total of 2,947 apartments in the ninety-five buildings. Only 167 apartments, or 5.6 per cent. of the total, are now vacant. They represent annual rents aggregating $505,420, which is 4.8 per cent. of the total annual rent roll of $10,497,000.

"Above Eighty-fifth Street, extending to 102d Street and from Fifth Avenue to the East River, we found twenty-six buildings, of which sixteen, containing 656 apartments, were completed prior to 1925. At this time, thirty-eight, or 5.8 per cent of them, are vacant. In 1925 six new buildings were opened, and fifty apartments, or 13 per cent. of the total, are vacant. This Fall four new buildings with 217 apartments were opened, of which 148, or 73 per cent., are rented.

"In the uptown section there is, then, a total of 1,258 apartments in the twenty-six buildings. The total vacancies number 157 apartments, or 12.5 per cent. The annual rental of these vacancies is $460,810, which is 13.5 per cent. of the total annual rent roll of $3,427,500.

"The totals of all the buildings on crosstown streets from Thirty-fourth to 102d Street show 134 modern structures, containing 4,686 apartments. Only 344, or 7.55 per cent., are now vacant. The lost rent occasioned by these vacancies is $966,230, or 6.75 per cent. of the total rent roll of $14,946,500.

"The lost rents through vacancies are calculated in terms of the rents for a whole year. Of course, many of these vacancies will be absorbed before the year is ended and the adverse percentages will show a decrease.

"The vacancy of 7.55 per cent. would indicate that rental conditions are better than most owners make allowance for. Provision is made to carry about a 10 per cent. vacancy, so that anything better than that is a source of satisfaction, and when one considers that in the whole of the east side there are only 733 vacancies out of a total of 9,218 apartments, which is just over 8 per cent., one feels that the east side is considerably short of being overbuilt."

"OWN-YOUR-HOME" SHOW.

List of Additional Exhibitors Is Announced.

The policy of "inspection before acceptance," put into effect with reference to real estate developments and building operations for the forthcoming ninth annual "Own-Your-Home" Building and Equipment Exposition, at Madison Square Garden, Feb. 19 to 26, has been an advantage to real estate men and builders, according to Robert H. Sexton, Managing Director.

In commenting upon the policy of having exhibitors submit their methods, processes and materials to a committee of competent authorities in the various fields of planning and building, Mr. Sexton said: "The fact that the front elevations of several different types of homes will be constructed and shown at the Exposition, signifies the entire willingness of individuals and firms to pass the test of acceptability and speaks volumes for the high class of exhibitors invited to participate in the forthcoming Exposition. This policy of 'inspection before acceptance' not only protects the thousands of interested home owners and home seekers who annually visit the Exposition, but assures those exhibiting of the right sort of competition and company."

Among the national manufacturers and distributers of building materials who have recently reserved space for the Ninth Annual "Own-Your-Home" Building and Equipment Exposition are Armstrong Cork and Linoleum Company, Celotex Company, Chamberlin Metal Weatherstrip Company, Detroit Steel Products Company, Chicago Faucet Company, Domestic Stoker Company, Fitzgibbons Boiler Company, Cinder Tile Company, Artstone Products, Inc., Hartmann-Sanders Company, Hawthorne Roofing Tile Company, Arthur E. Lane Lumber Company, Marb-L-Cote Company, Morene Products Company, New York District Common Brick Association and Wood Conversion Company.

New Mortgage Firm Formed.

Jack Halperin and Curtis B. Habighorst, formerly in the mortgage department of Thomas J. O'Reilly, have opened their own office in the Stuart Building at Jamaica, N. Y., under the firm name of Habighorst & Halperin.

BOARD TO REQUEST TAX MODIFICATION

National Association to Ask That Cooperatives Be Given Private House Status.

A modification of Federal taxation in favor of cooperative apartment owners will be asked by the National Association of Real Estate Boards. The board will request that apartment buildings cooperatively owned by their tenants as individual homes be given the status of privately owned homes.

Request that recognition be made of the status of such apartments as homes will be included by the association in a brief asking for changes in the Federal Revenue act of 1926, or in the administrative provisions interpreting that act. The brief will shortly be presented to the joint committee of Congress appointed to cooperate with the Treasury Department in interpretation of the Federal Income Tax law and to recommend modifications or changes.

The action to be taken by the association follows a national conference on development of the new apartment type of home ownership, held at the Belmont Hotel in New York City Dec. 3. The meeting was a special gathering of the cooperative apartment section of the association. It was preceded by a field study of notable New York areas in which tenant-owned apartments have been developed, and was followed by an all-day meeting of the Executive Committee of the section, at which the following action was taken:

"Outlining of the program for the coming annual meeting of the section to be held at Miami, Fla., Jan. 12, 13 and 14 in connection with the annual meeting there of the National Association of Real Estate Boards.

"Appointment of a committee to study standard forms for the organization of cooperative apartments, looking toward a revision of the present forms published by the section.

Action of the association asking for classification of the apartment house unit owned as a home on a par with any other privately owned home in the matter of tax exemption will be taken in behalf of the owners of apartment buildings so organized that a full 100 per cent. of the ownership of the building is by individuals buying for home purposes.

The conference also pointed out need of further amendments to existing laws in the various States specifically authorizing cooperative apartment organizations to restrict the resale of the individual apartments. The success of most of the cooperatively owned apartment buildings throughout the country has been built on the careful selection of people of the same standards as occupants of the buildings and the necessity of obtaining the consent of the boards of directors or two-thirds of the owners before an apartment may change hands, it was brought out. Under the existing State laws cooperative apartment corporations are treated only as any business corporation.

A $300,000,000 LOSS IN NATIONAL BUILDING

A loss of approximately $300,000,000 in building operations throughout the United States for the year 1926 as compared with 1925 is indicated from reports of building permits issued in the leading cities and towns of the country and made public yesterday. These reports, made to F. W. Straus & Co. by the various building departments, show overall losses in the aggregate of approximately 5 per cent.

While the reports for the current month are not yet complete, it was pointed out that there is nothing in the situation to show that they would appreciably change the year's building losses as now indicated and it is expected that the nation's "twelve months" building program will approximate $6,300,000,000, as compared with $6,650,000,000 last year.

While the loss in building operations thus runs into a large amount in the aggregate, the slowing down processes now at work are not of sufficient consequence to prove a disturbing factor, it was said.

Building in Greater New York.

Building operations in the five boroughs of Greater New York are expected to exceed $1,000,000,000, which means that about one-sixth of all the building of the United States is now within the confines of New York City.

Many of the suburbs of the larger cities have made remarkable records. Yonkers and Mount Vernon, N. Y., are included among the twenty-five leading building cities. The latter led the country in point of increase with a gain of 101 per cent.

Notwithstanding various disturbing factors in Florida, Miami occupies eleventh place among the building cities of the nation based on the year's records so far.

The figures reported from the entire country indicate that the curve of decline is much sharper now than it has been at any time during the year. In 481 cities reporting to S. W. Straus & Co., November permits were $301,601,509 compared with $351,048,785 in November last year and with $405,212,894 in October this year. The loss from last November was 14 per cent. and from October 24 per cent.

The year closes with construction costs from one to one and one-half per cent. above last year. Building labor is 4 per cent. higher and materials from 2 to 3 per cent. lower.

DEMANDS ACTION ON HOUSING PLAN

Too Much Time Has Been Wasted in Useless Discussion, Saul Singer Says.

THE WAY ALREADY PAVED

Urges That Private Advantage Be Taken of Governor Smith's Enthusiasm in Model Homes.

Governor Smith made a strong plea for immediate action in rebuilding Manhattan's slum sections with model housing and urged the cooperation of wealthy men at a dinner held at the Biltmore last week.

The consensus of opinion among those interested in the proposed improvements is that too much time has already been wasted in talk that has resulted in nothing.

After listening to a preliminary report by the State Housing Board created by the last Legislature announcing that the plan as provided for in the law is quite feasible, and the building of new tenements to rent for from $9 to $12.50 per room per month entirely practical, the Governor had a few remarks to make regarding East side conditions.

He recalled the passage of the old tenement house law and the existence at that time, on the lower east side, of what was known as "Rung block," because of the number of people taken from there suffering from tuberculosis. He said that notwithstanding the law the district still had the old time tenements and "Rung block" still exists.

"People are going to live where they want to live and not where some theorist tells them they ought to live," he said.

"I don't believe you are ever going to be able to reduce the population of those sections of the city," he continued. "The problem cannot be solved by telling these people they would be better off in Brooklyn or in Queens. We are not building rapidly enough in the sparsely-settled sections to take care of them, and if we were we have not the transit facilities to take them there, so what is going to be done?"

Saul Singer, Vice President of the Bank of United States, who conceived and built the Garment Centre Buildings on Seventh Avenue where hundreds of east siders are employed, said yesterday:

"The grim tragedy of the lower east side is being played as a comedy in the drawing rooms of the upper east side. It is time that we realized that as subways are not built with coffee spoons, so model tenements cannot be built on luncheon tables. The solution of the housing problem is not a one-man job, and unless the city cooperates with the State, absolutely nothing can be accomplished. The history of housing in New York bears out my contention.

"When Theodore Roosevelt was Police Commissioner in 1895, he worked with Jacob Riis on the housing situation, which he then considered at a crisis. In his book, 'Theodore Roosevelt, the Citizen,' Jacob Riis tells how Colonel Roosevelt 'acted under an untried canon law, the failure of which might well involve a man in suits for very great damages.' But the destruction of tenements was one thing, and the building of them another.

"Soon Colonel Roosevelt was called to the affairs of the State and the nation, and he was compelled to leave New York and its housing problem behind. This has repeatedly happened with our big men, and over twenty years have elapsed and nothing has been done of a large nature.

"Now we have in Governor Smith an east sider who carried its problems with him into the Governorship of the State and has offered to the city all that his office and influence can command in the way of State cooperation. Let us take advantage of it before he too is demanded by the nation and must forego his dreams of a better east side. I note with apprehension that the Governor's Housing Committee is tending toward the placing of the burden on individuals rather than on the State and city. This is a grave error fatal to the ultimate success of the plan. I sincerely hope that the Governor will not approve of the change.

"Over 300,000 people now live in the congested area of the east side—a big, pulsating city. If private enterprise

OWNERS GUESS AT AVENUE NUMBERS

Tenants Along Seventh Avenue Extension Have No Numerical System.

REALTY TRANSFER PROBLEM

Case Cited Where It Was Legally Necessary to Place Exact Address in Deed.

Real estate owners and tenants in the blocks now comprising the Seventh Avenue extension, between Carmine Street on the south and Eleventh Street on the north, are resorting to the expedient of "guessing" their proper numbers. One such case recently arose where a title company insisted that, in the transfer of a plot on the extension, the correct address of the seller be placed in the deed. This presented for a time a serious problem, but eventually the difficulty was solved by inserting a "guess" number based, as to correctness, upon its location providing a proper numbering system were in force.

It has been ten years or so since the extension was cut through, extending Seventh Avenue from its old southerly terminus at Eleventh Street southward to Varick Street. At that time suggestions were made that the name of Varick Street be obliterated in favor of some prospective name which might be given to the new extension system.

This fanciful project was quickly snuffed out because, to the credit of those citizens of New York who still regarded old-time names as possessing some value and interest in the city, such a strong protest arose against wiping the honored name of Varick off of the municipal map that the agitation for nomenclature changes soon subsided.

No Numbers for Ten Years.

The junction of Seventh Avenue with Varick Street, therefore, at Carmine Street, making one continuous thoroughfare, did not create any difficulty in the numbers on Varick Street. The difficulty presented itself in the dozen or so along the extension from Carmine to Eleventh Street. During the past decade that section has remained without designating numbers and the best that shop keepers can do is to state that they are "on" Seventh Avenue near Barry, Christopher, Commerce or Bedford Street as the case may be.

The question has been before the office of the Manhattan Borough President and two or three perfunctory hearings have been held, but, so far as the records show, no real effort has been made to find a solution to the problem.

The chief difficulty presented is that if the extension is officially designated as Seventh Avenue, as it actually is, and city numbers begin where they logically should, at the beginning, Seventh Avenue would be at Carmine Street instead, as at the present time, at Eleventh Street. Under that system of renumbering all of the present Seventh Avenue numbers would be materially altered, and while something can be said in endeavoring to find a way over the bridge without upsetting the numbers familiar for many years to residents in Seventh Avenue, many residents and owners on the extension section do not consider that as a reasonable excuse for doing nothing to solve the problem.

Owners Want Action.

For the first few years after the completion of the extension work, no one seemed to care much about definite numbers. Within the last half dozen years, especially since the completion of the subway and the rapid upbuilding of that area of Greenwich Village and the commercial section of the lower west side, there is a positive need for a logical numbering system in the extension blocks.

The situation has been discussed in a general way by many property owners in that locality recently and the suggestion has been made that apparently the only way to quicken the municipal officials to definite action is to bring mandamus proceedings to compel the responsible city authorities to provide adequate numbering systems.

Vincent C. Peppe of the Peppe & Bros. realty firm was the broker in the recent sale which caused the necessity of guessing at a number for legal insertion in the deed.

"About two weeks ago," explained Mr. Peppe, "I sold the property at 8 St. Luke's Place for Hitchcock Harrison, the owner, and in turn rented him an apartment on Seventh Avenue in a location formerly known as 69-89 Leroy Street. The apartment is over a taxpayer and is in the rear of 59-61 Carmine Street, where I recently built an apartment house.

"At the time I sold the St. Luke's place property, the purchaser made it a part of his contract that it was to be delivered vacant to him, as he wanted to use it for his residence. On the day of closing title, it was necessary to insert in the deed Mr. Harrison's address, and a question arose as to what number on Seventh Avenue did Mr. Harrison live.

Guessing at Number.

"As there is no number to the house, he was not able to give it. I was asked by the title company, but I replied it could not be done and offered to give the block and lot number, but the company would not accept that because the law provides for the seller's present residence address to be put in the deed. Finally we decided to give the address 5 Seventh Avenue, near Bedford Street. That was about the nearest we could get to it.

"A little later we rented a store in the same building to another tenant and it was necessary for him to get his business stationery printed, but he does not know what to do, as we do not know what number to give him. He is contemplating putting 'On Seventh Avenue Extension,' between Bedford and Clarkson Streets.

"This matter has been taken up with the city departments to compel them to give numbers on the Seventh Avenue Extension or change the name, but the difficulty is that the tenants on the upper part of Seventh Avenue do not want their addresses changed. It was suggested to name it Pennsylvania Avenue, but objections were made to that. Nothing has been done, although the avenue has been extended for the last ten years.

"It is a great nuisance not to be able to tell the number of one's residence or the address of the place of business. A few years ago it was not so bad, because the gore lots were vacant, but since new buildings have been erected the present situation is presenting new difficulties and is a real annoyance to the business population."

Seventeen Astoria Homes Sold.

Ira Levin, builder, sold seventeen two-family brick homes in the residential section of Astoria. The first twelve of these homes were from 2,044 Sixth Avenue to 2,070 Sixth Avenue. The remaining five were from 3,601 Shore Road to 3,719 Shore Road.

AUCTIONEER CHANGES BUSINESS ADDRESS

James R. Murphy has leased offices in the Astor House Building at 217 Broadway, where he will conduct his real estate auction business on and after Dec. 21. The change of address is being made because of increasing business and the fact that 20 Nassau Street, where Mr. Murphy is at present located, is to be demolished for the new thirty-story home of the Chase National Bank.

In a forecast of general market conditions for 1927, Mr. Murphy said yesterday: "I have always considered the real estate auctioneer peculiarly fortunate, inasmuch as he has his finger continually on the "pulse" of the market. There is no more accurate gauge of the salability of property than an auction sale. By the temper and spirit of the bidding, by the attendance, by resales and many other indications, the auctioneer is able to foresee accurately conditions that will prevail during an entire season. During the past month our special sales days of city and suburban properties have been very well attended, the bidding has been exceptionally spirited and the market has experienced a general stimulation. I look for a record real estate year during 1927 in both New York City and the suburban areas."

27 MILES OF PIPING.

Graybar Building Heating System Completed Last Monday.

Twenty-seven miles of piping, weighing 260 tons, have been installed in the Graybar Building, just east of the Grand Central Terminal and north of the Hotel Commodore, and steam has been circulating through this gigantic heating system since last Monday.

Eleven miles of risers concealed from view supply the 3,500 radiators, aggregating 126,000 square feet of radiation, which have been installed. The steam heating system is of the vacuum type and designed to operate at a gauge pressure not to exceed two pounds when the outside temperature is at zero degrees, Fahrenheit.

Four touring cars, side by side, could pass simultaneously through one of the huge flues which rise through this building venting the railroad property below the ground floor. These flues are additional to the main supply and exhaust ventilating systems for the building proper.

Eastern Offices, Inc., are the owners of this building, which is being erected by the Todd, Robertson, Todd Engineering Corporation. It was designed by Sloan & Robertson.

LAMPORT TO BE HONORED.

Testimonial Dinner to Mark 70th Anniversary of Yeshiva President.

Nathan Lamport, President of the Yeshiva of America, an institution of higher Jewish learning now being built on Washington Heights at an initial cost of $5,000,000, will be honored Sunday, Dec. 19, with a testimonial dinner given at the Hotel Astor by the trustees of the Yeshiva on the occasion of his seventieth birthday.

Mr. Lamport, who started the building fund campaign for the new Yeshiva with an initial contribution of $100,000, is President of the Lamport Realty Corporation. Prior to entering the real estate business he was President of the Lamport Manufacturers Supply Company.

The Yeshiva of America, when completed, will comprise eight buildings occupying three city blocks on Amsterdam Avenue, between 186th and 189th Streets.

More than 800 guests will attend the dinner. Among the speakers will be Samuel Levy, Judge Otto A. Rosalsky, Harris L. Selig, Executive Director of the Yeshiva College, and Samuel C. Lamport.

TRANSPORTATION NEEDED.

Questionnaire Shows Westchester Residents Need Increased Service.

Westchester County's most pressing needs are increased water supply, more motor bus lines and new trunk line sewers, is the consensus of opinion of those replying to a questionnaire recently distributed by Sidney H. Sonn of the firm of H. & S. Sonn, Inc.

Asked to state the quality or feature of the county that made the strongest appeal to visitors as well as to those living there nearly 70 per cent. of the replies indicated that it was Westchester's natural beauty of landscape. There was always a heavy vote in favor of the county's many attractive homes and its easy accessibility to New York City. Mr. Sonn is having the vote tabulated and will transmit the results to the County Board of Supervisors.

MID-MANHATTAN OPENING.

Twenty-five-Story Greeley Square Building Ready for Occupancy.

The Greeley Square Building, a twenty-five story office and showroom building, occupying a plot 100 by 100 feet on the northwest corner of Sixth Avenue and Thirty-first Street, is one of the latest of Manhattan's new business buildings to be opened for occupancy.

Although the steel work was not started until May 1, the building was completed and opened for tenancy during the past week. It was erected by Lasser & Baer, owners and builders, from plans by Gronenberg & Leuchtag, architects. Thoens & Flaunlacher, Inc., have been appointed managing agents.

PARKWAYS WILL PAY.

Westchester Is Being Reimbursed for Outlay by Increased Valuations.

Louis F. Blumenthal of Haring & Blumenthal, who was recently elected a member of the Advisory Committee of the Westchester County Development Board, said that the cost of the Westchester County Park program will be more than justified by the returns to individual property owners throughout the entire county.

Mr. Blumenthal pointed out that this year has set a record in building which has surpassed any other year in the history of the county. He attributes this to the fact that the park program is now taking definite shape. "The construction of parkways such as those at Glen Cove has caused property values to rise from 100 to 500 per cent." according to Mr. Blumenthal.

This section, he says, is rapidly realising on the investment being made by the county at Rye Beach and at Manursing Island, which are adjacent to it.

Five Brooklyn Plots Sold.

Realty Associates sold five business lots at the southwest corner of East Thirty-fifth Street and Avenue S, Brooklyn, to M. A. C. Builders, Inc., through A. Mishkin, broker. The property is part of the eleven acres of land on both sides of Avenue S, from East Thirty-second Street to East Thirty-eighth Street, bought by Realty Associates on Nov. 4, 1925, at a Supreme Court partition auction sale.

LOAN ASSOCIATIONS HAVE OLD HISTORY

System Had Inception In This Country in 1831 at Germantown, Pa.

ENCOURAGE PUBLIC THRIFT

Serve Real Economic Needs—About 12,000 Now Listed in the United States.

Considerable misunderstanding exists in the public mind regarding the purposes and operating methods of building and loan associations, states Edwin F. Howell, Chairman of the National Thrift Committee of the United States League of Local Building and Loan Associations. National Thrift Week will be observed during the week beginning Jan. 17.

"In the various sections of the United States these institutions operate under different names," says Mr. Howell. "The cognomen building and loan association has been accepted as indicating a corporation which would build houses and loan money on them, and this particular name has been adopted by the associations in the majority of the States. In Louisiana they are known as homestead associations. In Massachusetts they are termed cooperative banks and in New York State they are known under the banking law as savings and loan associations. There is no indication at the present time of any likelihood of the adoption of a uniform descriptive name over the country, but that may be a development of the future.

"The history of the development of these associations is shrouded in antiquity. There are records of cooperative societies in China dating back thousands of years and there is also reason to believe that the general theory of cooperation along similar lines had taken root in Germany somewhat prior to the formation of the Hanseatic League. The idea had been adopted in Great Britain over a hundred years ago, but just how much earlier is uncertain.

"A moving cause of the formation of these institutions was doubtless an effort to overcome the disadvantages of the ancient feudal system of land tenure by the force of cooperation. While the immediate effect was not to put the tenant into actual possession of the land, as that was not possible under the laws, it was a distinct aid in the building of individual homes to meet the needs of the individual rather than to have the homes furnished by a large and powerful land owner who had no particular interest in the type of building erected and less interest in aiding the tenant to become independent.

"The system was introduced into the United States in 1831 by the formation of a cooperative building and loan association in Germantown, Pa., and from that time the spread of the idea has been noteworthy. From that one small institution has developed a system of nearly 13,000 individual associations in the United States, with total assets of $3,000,000,000. This figure compares favorably with the capital resources of all the national banks in the United States, and these cooperative associations are now the custodians of the savings of about 12,000,000 individuals.

"That their appeal is not limited to any one class of people is evidenced by the fact that they are patronized by all. That they are exerting a marked and happy influence upon our economic structure is shown by the fact that they have received the sympathetic interest of President Coolidge, Secretaries Mellon and Hoover, ex-Secretary Hughes and other thoughtful men who have the well-being of the country at heart.

"Any institution which points the way to national thrift, which makes it possible for a person of small means to save regularly and systematically in modest amounts, and which aims to place the person of small income in possession of his own home and removes him from the congested districts upon his own portion of our land, is deserving of public confidence and support."

Smith, Financial Secretary; Martin Gehringer, Treasurer, and Fred C. Kreuscher. Bamberger to Build Big Addition To Newark, N. J., Department Store

Sixteen-Story Structure Will Cost $10,000,000 and Double the Present Capacity—Will Contain a Three-Story Model House, Fully Furnished.

Plans have been completed by the firm of L. Bamberger & Co. to erect a $10,000,000 addition to its present department store in Newark. It will be a sixteen-story building. This will double the present floor space, and will combine every feature of present-day building construction and store conveniences.

The new stucture will rise immediately north of the present store building, on Market, Halsey and Washington Streets, occupying a ground area of 54,430 square feet. The addition will increase this area to approximately 90,000 square feet and will increase the frontage on Washington Street by 141 feet and on Halsey Street by 100 feet. The frontage on Rank Street will be 261 feet, making a total building frontage of 1,238 feet.

The 260-foot towers surmount the building, supporting the radio station WOR. The addition provides for a basement, sub-basement and sub-basement mezzanine and when completed the building will contain substantially twenty-four acres of floor space. Work on the structure will begin after Jan. 1. Jarvis Hunt of Chicago is the architect, Martin C. Schwab, consulting engineer, and Taussig & Flesch are the fixture architects.

Will Have Thirty-two Elevators.

The building will contain many novel features and thirty-two elevators, some having a speed of 800 feet a minute for express service. There will also be an auditorium accommodating 600 persons for store events and diversements. Other features will be for storage vaults to store $8,000,000 worth of furs, an electric generating plant sufficient in size to light a city of 65,000 population, an ice manufacturing plant capable of 165 tons of refrigeration and, although fireproofed, there will be a 100,000-gallon water supply. The main dining room, with a seating capacity of 1,800, will be supplemented by a tea room seating 350 persons and several private dining rooms accommodating from 80 to 250 persons.

The new Bamberger building is designed to conform in architectural style with the present building and will be constructed of steel frame, tile floor arches, brick and terra cotta exterior walls. The present building will be remodeled in certain sections, so that, with the additions, the result will represent in its entirety a single unified area.

The eleventh floor will be used for general and executive offices. The twelfth floor will be used as stock rooms and the thirteenth floor will be devoted to receiving merchandise. On the fourteenth floor will be a candy factory, an ice cream factory and a bakery.

Three-Story Furnished House.

A unique feature will be a three-story dwelling completely furnished and extending from the floor of the fifth to the ceiling of the sixth floor. The general offices are so designed and equipped as to eliminate noise distractions. Lighting will be of the indirect type, the ceiling will be covered with material which will absorb noise and the floors of cork, so that the operation of hundreds of electrically operated machines, typewriters, &c., will contribute a minimum of confusion.

Quarters for use of workers will be enlarged and a "silence room" containing thirty-five cots for rest will be installed. The hospital facilities will have a physician, dentist and registered nurses in attendance in addition to a chiropodist, heart and lung specialists and a surgeon.

The L. Bamberger & Co. store had its beginning in December, 1892, when Louis Bamberger, the founder, with his partners, Felix Fuld and Louis M. Frank, opened a place of business at 147 Market Street, Newark. The partnership has continued until the present, broken only by the death of Mr. Frank in 1910.

42-STORY BUILDING FOR WEST 42D ST.

West Forty-second Street, between Sixth Avenue and Broadway, will be improved as soon as current leases expire with a forty-two-story office building, costing, with the land, approximately $9,000,000, it was announced last week by William S. Sussman, Inc., in a statement of the sale of the McCreery Building at 110-114 West Forty-second Street to the Consol Realty Company.

The Consol Company, according to Mr. Sussman, who negotiated the deal, paid $3,000,000 to the James McCreery Realty Corporation for the six-story building, which is on a lot 75 by 200 feet, running through the block to 107-117 West Forty-first Street.

The purchase gave the Consol Company an "L"-shaped plot of approximately 200,000 square feet at the southwest corner of Sixth Avenue, and the proposed office building will overlook Bryant Park, across the street.

In March the Consol Company purchased a leasehold on the McCreery lot, together with the fee to the property abutting on the east, and the deal yesterday gives it ownership of the entire fee in a single parcel.

Starrett & Van Vleck, architects, have drawn plans for the proposed forty-two-story building. The current leases, it was said, will expire in a short time.

ELECTION OF DIRECTORS.

The Broadway Association to Hold Annual Meeting Jan. 10.

The Broadway Association will hold its annual election of directors at the Hotel Astor on Jan. 10.

The Nominating Committee has made the following nominations: Frank V. Baldwin, Empire Trust Company; A. F. Berry, United Electric Light and Power Company; H. H. Bisallion, banker; W. L. Colt, Colt, Stewart & Foy, Inc.; Frank E. Campbell, Campbell's Funeral Church; John David, clothier; Joseph LeBlang, Public Service Ticket Office, Inc.; Arthur L. Lee, Hotel McAlpin; William McBride, McBride's Theatre Ticket Agency; F. A. Muschenheim, Hotel Astor; J. M. Rowland, Fisk Rubber Company; G. L. Slawson, Slawson & Hobbs.

EQUITABLE LOANS PLACED.

Assurance Company Loans $450,000 to the City Housing Corporation.

As further evidence of the Equitable Life Assurance Society's interest in home ownership, it was announced yesterday that the society had made mortgage loans of $450,000 to the City Housing Corporation, a limited dividend company which is building a model community for moderate income families at Sunnyside Gardens, Queens.

The loans cover eighty-six one, two and three family brick houses known as Washington Court, comprising the square block bounded by Bliss and Packard Streets from Skillman to Middleburg Avenues. Washington Court was built this year, and all the houses have been sold and are now occupied by their owners.

and philanthropy could have conquered the housing problem it would have done so long ago. A long line of serious men and women have put their minds to it—Jacob Riis, Josiah Royce, H. Phelps Stokes, Jane Addams and H. C. Phipps, who built model tenements. In the later years we have witnessed the housing ventures of Mrs. Russel Sage and the Vanderbilt and Rockefeller families. All of these good people have had their say and now they are succeeded by a group whose projected accomplishments do not square with their advance promises.

"Mr. Heckscher came into the arena like a lion with a gigantic plan of securing a half million dollars from each of 500 men. He now settles down as meekly as a Spring lamb with a plan for one little house, which to my mind will be a detriment rather than a help. Isolated structures only tend to raise property valuations, rendering the completion of the general scheme quite impossible. This job must be done wholesale, or it will not be done at all.

"The background of European cities which Mr. Heckscher has brought to bear seems to me to be quite outside of our New York picture. We know very well what must be done, and that it must be done without narrowing restrictions. Mr. Heckscher cannot be accused of lack of generosity, of knowledge of building nor of New York problems, but many others who are speaking on the subject are people of little knowledge and less experience.

"I observe with gratification that the underlying note of Mr. Heckscher's statement before the Governor on Wednesday was a shift from pure philanthropy to city and State operation as suggested in my plan. Further experience and study will bring Mr. Heckscher, I am sure, into conformity with my thought.

"In addition to my insistence that the work be done in a wholesale way, I affirm that it must be done on a business basis. To charge the east side, as has been done, with being the nursery of crime and refuge of the unfit, is an unfair blanket indictment. Criminal proclivities are not confined to the east side. The east siders have their faults, but they do not rank as moral failures. This phase of the situation should be discontinued and not entered into the discussion.

"The fact is that the people of the east side are good citizens who have not had a square deal—the equivalent of the contributions they have made, nor even the money they have paid for housing. They do not ask charity. They pay their clothing and grocery bills with profit to some one and are willing to do the same with regard to their housing. What I am contending for is a business deal with the residents of the east side, in the matter of living quarters, such as other people receive in the so-called select portions of the city.

"Less than 5 per cent. of the people of the east side are unfortunate. The lives of the 95 per cent. should not be hampered by classifying them as the outcasts of humanity. They can and do meet the problems of life. All that is required is that we give them a fair return—they have never had it—for their money in housing.

"A great many idealistic words have been expended on moving the east siders to the country. I resent the statement that we can bodily transplant these people against their will. They have as much right to elect their place of residence as those who pay $25,000 a year for apartments on Park Avenue.

"Then, too, the people of the east side are commercially interdependent and to break their chain of relationships would be to destroy the means of livelihood for many. The social life centred on the east side is as dear to its people and as full of traditions as that which clusters about the ancestral home of any Knickerbocker.

"The forcible moving of the residents of the east side would intensify the acuteness of the traffic problem. As it is, they live near their work, their amusements and sources of supplies. In the rebuilding of the east side under a comprehensive plan, wider streets and more scientific arteries of traffic could be provided, which would help lift the traffic burden of all Manhattan.

"The whole social structure of the city is affected by conditions on the east side and the building of one house will be as effective as a snowflake in increasing the volume of the Atlantic Ocean. I am perfectly willing to lend any cooperation I can to Mr. Heckscher or any one else who is building a model house, but I do say that it is not a help to the situation.

"The treatment of the housing situation should have two aspects: The cooperation of the State and the city that only they can give, and the business side, which takes into consideration that at least ninety-five per cent. of the residents of the east side are sane, normal and active people. If well-intentioned philanthropists wish to take care of the five per cent.—and they should be considered—five per cent. of the condemned area can be given over to a purely charitable development, leased to those who undertake this problem without compensation to the city.

"As a summing up, I want to say that I am firm in the belief that this building should be done, as I have suggested before, in a wholesale way, taking the great area of land under condemnation and building before the situation can become speculative and in price prohibitive to the carrying out of any plan.

"Secondly, that no plan can be put into operation which destroys business initiative. The activities of the builders could be controlled under the plan that I have suggested to the Mayor, which also calls for the ultimate repayment to the city of the bond issues and taxes by a return of the property to the city. And here let me point out that the steady depreciation of east side property is yearly increasing the revenue to the city in taxes. Furthermore, I affirm that the providing of housing is just as worthy a cause as any religious or educational institution from which we exact no taxes.

"Every plan that has been proposed has been thought out on the basis of tax exemption, and the plan which I submitted to the Mayor provides that the city be eventually repaid for the tax exemption feature. This also answers the question as to the city's permanent control of the property. The combination of State and city control with proper enthusiasm of capital will solve this problem without recourse to philanthropy.

"I do not consider the help of the city and State in such a matter philanthropy. Colonel Roosevelt diagnosed the situation in this way: 'Transit and other problems are important, but it is absolutely vital to have decent housing and proper playgrounds for the children.' The Colonel's statement holds as true now as it did twenty years ago. The east side tenement has largely replaced the log cabin as the source of our great men. The approach to the problem now being made is farcical and would be amusing were not the welfare of hundreds of thousands of our most useful citizens involved.

"I do not care who gets the credit, or whose name is glorified by association with the plan. All I want is a big constructive job that will accomplish the purpose and once and for all, give the east side respectable housing without rent gouging and land speculation. Property has been improved in small parcels before. If those who are suggesting this plan were familiar with the east side and its history, they would see the folly of it.

"Cannot the same genius that has made America the industrial empire of the world be applied to this east side problem? If we were involved in war we would readily raise the resources. I here and now declare war on the deplorable tenement conditions of the east side, and call upon the citizens of New York to show that we still have Roosevelt-hearted men in our midst."

BROOKLYN PASSES $250,000,000 MARK

IS A NORMAL INCREASE

Figures Show Three-Fourths of All New Buildings Were for Dwelling Purposes.

Brooklyn's new construction for 1926 will exceed that of 1925 by 15 per cent., it was announced today by M. Lloyd Bowen, Vice President of the Leverich Bond and Mortgage Corporation, following a year-end survey and analysis of building conditions throughout the borough, which showed that Brooklyn had passed the quarter of a billion mark.

Solidity of growth was noted in particular, with various types of construction prevailing in their normal proportion. Although certain classes of business structures showed declines from the 1925 records, the normal proportions for the whole were maintained. Three-fourths of all new construction was for dwelling purposes, as in 1925.

Conclusions of the survey were substantiated by a checkup of records at the Bureau of Buildings, where it was disclosed that the first eleven months of 1926 had already put the total value of projected new construction up to $250,062,385, an increase of 4.9 per cent. over the figure for the entire twelve months of last year.

The total for the first eleven months this year was found to show a 14 per cent. increase over the corresponding period of 1925. That this will be more than maintained was indicated by the opening of December activity. During the first four days of the month applications were filed for permits on $6,290,930 worth of new construction, which was 64 per cent. above the figure for the first five days of December, 1925.

Comparing the first eleven months of this year to the whole of 1925, important gains were noted in the field of dwellings. With the total value of projected new construction of this class reaching $191,419,900 by Dec. 1, last year's total was already exceeded by 6 per cent.

Brick dwellings comprised $167,988,900 of the 1926 figure, exceeding the mark set during 1925 by 14 per cent. One-family brick houses planned so far this year had a total value of $16,367,500, or 25 per cent. more than in the twelve months of 1925. Brick tenements surpassed the 1925 total by 33 per cent, reaching a value of $121,662,500 during the first eleven months of 1926.

With the total value of frame dwelling construction approximately $11,000,000 lower than during the twelve months of 1925, a decrease in this class is certain. In 1925 the cost of projected dwellings of this type amounted to $34,051,045, while up to Dec. 1 this year's total was $23,549,700.

The number of families provided for by all types of projected dwelling construction was 8 per cent. above the 1925 total. The figure for the first eleven months this year was 43,054.

Although the computations for 1926 are based on the first eleven months, it is pointed out that the averages are unlikely to be changed greatly by the December figures.

Only a slight change occurred in the average cost per family of all dwelling construction. In 1925 the figure was $4,433 and in 1926 it was $4,445.

One-family brick houses cost 7 per cent. less on the average, due possibly to larger individual operations by builders, reducing the expenses. The 1925 average cost of $7,625 was cut to $7,061.

In brick tenement construction, on the other hand, an increase of 5 per cent. was shown in the average cost per family, the 1926 figure being $3,950, as compared with $3,763.

The average tenement building was 17 per cent. more costly this year, the 2,488 separate buildings showing an average value of $48,800 each, as against $41,700 for each of the 2,235 structures in 1925.

EXCAVATION WORK STARTS.

1,016 Fifth Avenue to Be Ready for Occupancy Next Fall.

Excavation work has been started on the new fourteen-story apartment to be erected at 1,016 Fifth Avenue, south corner of Eighty-third Street, by Albert Sokolski. John B. Peterkin is the architect, and Douglas L. Elliman & Co. has been appointed renting agent.

The building will be 76.6 feet on Fifth Avenue and 178 feet on Eighty-third Street. It will contain sixty apartments of seven and nine rooms, including two penthouse apartments. The building will be ready for occupancy in the fall of 1927.

BROKERS WILL OCCUPY MADISON AV. QUARTERS

Pease & Elliman to Take Over New $1,000,000 Home at No. 660 Tomorrow Morning.

Pease & Elliman, Inc., will open the doors of 660 Madison Avenue tomorrow morning to the public for the transaction of that class of the real estate business with which they have for years been so closely identified.

The thirteen-story structure has been rushed to completion. There have been 140 workmen almost continuously employed nights, days and Sundays for several weeks in order to get the building ready so that before the holidays Pease & Elliman could transfer their business from 340 Madison Avenue and give possession of the latter building on the first of the coming year.

The building in itself has a considerable amount of rentable space of the usual type. The five lower floors have been designed under the guidance of J. E. R. Carpenter. Dwight P. Robinson & Co., Inc., were the contractors.

The firm will occupy the basement, in addition to five floors. The building represents a cost of nearly $1,000,000.

KENNELLY AUCTION SALE.

Jackson Estate Property to Be Sold Monday at Noon.

At the new Real Estate Exchange, 86 Vesey Street, tomorrow at noon, William Kennelly, auctioneer, will hold the last of their 1926 special auction sales.

For the estate of Daniel H. Jackson they will sell an eleven-story fireproof mercantile building at 244 Fifth Avenue, while the five and one-half story tenement at 90 Forsyth Street and a six-story building at 110 Ludlow Street will be offered at dissolution sale.

Many other parcels of property in Manhattan, Bronx, Brooklyn, Staten Island and Tarrytown, N. Y., are included in this sale. Most of these properties are of the investment type, apartment houses and tenements.

A theatre in Brooklyn, improved lots at New Dorp, S. I., and forty-five acres in Tarrytown add further interest to this auction.

ESTATE HOLDING IN SALE.

Joseph P. Day to Offer Moses G. Byers Property.

Joseph P. Day will sell at public auction by order of the Title Guarantee and Trust Company, executor of the estate of the late Moses G. Byers, the two-story loft building and four-story stable, on a plot 81 by 75 feet, at the southeast corner of Seventh Avenue and Eighteenth Street.

The property will be offered in the Vesey Street Exchange at 12 o'clock noon, Tuesday, Dec. 21. At the same time and place Mr. Day will also sell to the highest bidders a number of improved parcels in Manhattan and a list of vacant and improved Long Island properties.

AWARD MEDALS FOR BEST BUILDINGS

skill diploma was presented to H. F. Dawson, owner of the building, and a certificate to Greville Rickard, architect. It was the opinion of the committee that the building was an unusual example of charming and effective alteration work.

The building is four stories high and the new façade replaced an old dwelling front of the brownstone age. The façade has been brought out to the building line and designed in the conservative style of the Georgian period, executed in red brick and light colored limestones. The ornamentation for the two round discs is suggestive of old Greek coins or shields, expressing antiquity.

No second prize was awarded for altered buildings, it being the feeling of the committee that no other altered structure merited the recognition that a second award would entail.

In making the announcement of the awards and in explanation of their criticism of the lack of architectural merit in many of the new and altered buildings erected, the association made the following statement which was adopted as the report of the Committee on Architectural Betterment and approved by the Board of Directors:

"It is the opinion of this committee that although the general average of new buildings erected and alterations completed during the past year was, in a measure, superior architecturally to that of the previous year, there is still a very noticeable lack of proper architectural effort in the design of commercial structures and the treatment of their façades.

"In order that the general public may understand the reasons underlying the awarding of an annual prize for the best new and best altered buildings erected in the Fifth Avenue section, it seems not only appropriate but necessary that the committee should emphasize the two basic principles which influence their judgment of the merits of the buildings coming within the scope of their awards.

"Whether a building be a new one or an alteration, it must be of the current year and be completed or practically so as far as its interior is concerned. If incomplete, the Committee on Architectural Betterment postpones its judgment until the next year.

"The building, in the opinion of the committee, must have architectural merit. The final selection may be tempered by the other basic objects of the association, which are to improve the architecture and appearance of neighborhoods or streets which are within the limits of the territory protected by the Fifth Avenue Association.

Finds Careless Architecture.

"It is the feeling of the Committee on Architectural Betterment that insufficient thought was given to the architectural effect in a large number of buildings erected during the year, and in addition there existed evidence of the fact that the supervision of design and construction had not been exercised by men skilled in their profession.

"The Committee on Architectural Betterment feels that this tendency on the part of owners and builders should be greatly deplored because in many instances there has been no apparent effort to produce buildings in harmony with the character of the Fifth Avenue section.

"The committee also believes that this announcement should contain a statement to the effect that under the rules not only were residential buildings eliminated, but that the practice of confining consideration to commercial structures had automatically eliminated any hotels or apartment hotels erected during the year."

NEW YORK RANKS AS WORLD METROPOLIS

Maurice Mandelbaum Says Manhattan Is More Than the Country's Largest City.

PROSPERITY WILL CONTINUE

Geographical Boundaries Will Tend to Make Values Rise in the Future.

New York is no longer just the largest city in the United States, it is the metropolis of the world, according to Maurice Mandelbaum of Harris & Maurice Mandelbaum, Inc. "Fixed physical and geographic factors are responsible for this," Mr. Mandelbaum said. "Each year sees added numbers of new ships enter and leave its harbor. Each year sees hundreds of thousands of additional visitors stopping here, and each year sees thousands of new businesses coming into existence within its limits to supply the myriad demands and needs of its ever-growing population.

"There is a reason for this great growth, and that reason is the general prosperity of the country as a whole. But while this is an important factor and one that other cities enjoy as well as Manhattan, there is another factor of even greater significance that is peculiar to New York only. If you take a map of New York City, you will find that Brooklyn and Queens begin at the East River and end at Montauk Point. That is, they have the whole of Long Island as a potential field to develop in. Manhattan, on the other hand, commences at the Battery and ends at Van Cortlandt Park. Its area is limited, and this in my opinion is the most important factor governing its rapid growth.

"While present prosperity will tend to stimulate future prosperity, Manhattan has its fixed limits which must be developed to take care of its ever-increasing growth. Business attracts business. It follows then, as a natural effect, that with business competing for locations in a limited area values must rise; and, as the city grows, values that are the exception of today will be the commonplace of tomorrow. With its limited area, large sections of the city have been developed into certain trade and industrial centres. Lower Manhattan has developed as the world's greatest financial centre. The west side above Columbus Circle has become a residential district, with Broadway, its main artery, given over to retail houses. The east side north of Fortieth Street and west of Madison Avenue, with Fifth Avenue above Fifty-ninth Street, is rapidly becoming Manhattan's most exclusive residential district. From Fortieth Street south a great barrier has been erected almost across the entire island. This barrier comprises the fur, millinery, textile and garment centres.

"This leaves a belt between Madison Avenue and Ninth Avenue open to development and already the trend in this section has become apparent. The Grand Central zone is a new financial and hotel centre. The Times Square section is a theatre and hotel district, while the streets east and west of Fifth Avenue north of Forty-second Street are rapidly being given over to retail centres for jewelry, books, furniture and essentials of everyday life.

"It is here that the paradox enters. This district which is rapidly being developed with these retail centres is practically undeveloped with tall buildings to meet their needs. There are unbroken rows of four and five story brownstone houses and mansions, many of which have been converted for business, still standing on the side streets. It is in this neighborhood that I expect to see a great part of next year's activity centre. The recent removal of the zoning restrictions on Fifty-fourth Street is the handwriting on the wall. Business has come and the brownstones must give way to the skyscrapers for progress will brook no delay.

"Another section of the city that is now in a state of metamorphosis is Eighth Avenue. There was a time, and not many years back, that Eighth Avenue was considered as a negligible entity in the real estate market. The past two years have proved this consideration to be a grave mistake.

"On several occasions during the past year there were ominous rumblings heard about the condition of the market. Builders were told that the city was being overbuilt. Surveys recently made by reputable firms do not tend to bear out these warnings. As a matter of fact there does not even seem to be a healthy surplus of vacant business and loft space or empty apartments.

"Most of these warnings were the result of conditions outside of New York City itself. Some of these no doubt were augmented by the policies and practices of a few individuals and concerns who were duly seeking to boom sections of the country in which they happened to be interested. In a great city like New York it is impossible to prevent entirely such exploitation, but it is carried on by only a few persons, as the average broker, operator, investor and property owner, knowing as he does that he stands to suffer a direct loss when the bubble is pricked, will not countenance such practices.

"Significance is given this by the fact that reputable bond houses have placed bond issues totaling about $1,000,000,000 during the past year. This sum represents the investments of millions of persons and a large percentage of it was placed on construction here in New York City. The houses placing these issues are conservative business institutions doing a legitimate business and I feel safe in saying that not one of them is prone to tie up millions of dollars belonging to its clients unless there is a solid foundation of security and assured return on which the investment is based.

THE LAW OF LICENSES FOR REALTY BROKERS

Those Following the Calling as a Business Need a License; Others Do Not.

Amendments to the law establishing a system of licenses, with yearly renewals, for real estate brokers and salesmen, define the meaning of the act by saying a real estate broker is "any person, firm or corporation who, for another and for a fee, buys or rents, or attempts to negotiate or offers to negotiate, a loan secured, or to be secured, by a mortgage or other incumbrance upon or transfer of real estate."

The New York Law Review, commenting on the law, explains that it was intended to cover every transaction in which an interest in real estate may be involved, and that a person claiming a commission on any such transaction will have no standing in court in case of a suit to recover commissions, unless he has a license. And no person is permitted under the law to follow the occupation of a broker unless he is licensed.

The Review says:

"The purpose of the enactment, ostensibly at least, was to protect buyers and sellers of real estate from incompetent and dishonest brokers. In its original form there was some doubt whether the statute required real estate brokers in every city of the State to be licensed."

It is explained that a correction of faulty grammar in the law made it clear that this was the case. The comment continues:

"The statute was not intended to embrace every transaction in which an interest in real estate may be involved. It is inapplicable to a person whose vocation is the selling or exchanging of businesses as going concerns, although, as part of the good-will, such transactions may include the lease of a store or building. Such was the holding of the court in the recent case of Weingast vs. Rialto Pastry Shop, Inc. This was an action to recover commissions for negotiating the sale of a restaurant business, including the store, lease, good-will, fixtures and merchandise.

"The plaintiff did not claim to be a real estate broker, and had not procured a license as such. It was held that the plaintiff was not required to take out a license, and was not barred from maintaining an action to recover compensation if he had earned it. Judge Crane said that if the statute applied to such a person, then any broker or business man who negotiates for the sale or transfer of any business enterprise or the consolidation of corporations which may involve the transfer and sale of real estate or an interest in real estate, would be a real estate broker, unable to recover compensation unless licensed."

Reference is made to the construction of an ordinance of the City of St. Louis by the Circuit Court of Appeals. This ordinance required a license for "merchandise brokers," who were defined as "persons who arranged for the sale or purchase of goods, wares or merchandise or other articles of commerce." In this case the plaintiff, a sales manager of a wholesale grocery store, negotiated the sale of several grocery stores owned by the defendant. It was held that the plaintiff was not engaged as a merchandise broker and was not bound to obtain a license. Other similar instances are presented to explain the precise meaning of the law of licenses. Then The Review says:

"By the express language of the statute it is essential to the maintenance of an action for brokerage that the plaintiff allege and prove that he was duly licensed on the date when the cause of action arose. A real estate salesman may not maintain an action against a broker's customer on a primary claim. This, by virtue of the provision of the statute that such salesmen shall not receive or demand compensation of any kind from any person other than a duly licensed real estate broker regularly employing the salesmen for any service rendered or work done by such salesmen in the appraising, buying, selling, exchanging, leasing, renting or negotiating of a loan upon any real estate."

in Dickens's "Christmas Carol," was the type of employer who exacted unending hours of work for his employes and paid them small wages grudgingly.

The modern employer realizes that people to work well must be given cheerful working conditions, paid just wages and accorded a human interest.

We place all kinds of office workers with the modern employer, from the beginner to the experienced secretary.

On behalf of these employers and of ourselves we wish you all a very cheering Christmas and a satisfying and successful New Year.

WOULD CUT LUMBER IN SHORTER LENGTHS

Millions of Feet Wasted in Construction, Says Commerce Department.

SAVING TO HOME BUILDER

Small Buyer Is Quoted Lower Prices for Pieces in Dwelling Projects.

Declaring that millions of feet of lumber are wasted every year in building construction, the United States Department of Commerce has made an urgent plea through the National Committee on Wood Utilization for the marketing and use of short-length lumber as a conservation measure as well as a public duty.

The report of the committee, just issued, says: "Thirty-eight billion feet of softwood lumber were produced in the United States in 1925.

"This output could have been increased one-fifth without the felling of an additional tree or the investment of an additional dollar in mill equipment if lumber in lengths of less than eight feet had been in wider demand. The marketing of short lengths is thus a highly important problem in the wood-utilization field at present.

"Hundreds of thousands of small homes and farm structures are being built in the United States every year, and wherever in their construction long lengths of lumber are used when short lengths would serve the purpose just as well the result is waste.

"The custom of demanding long lengths originated in the days when the need for husbanding our forest products was less apparent than it is today.

"But those times have passed, and with them must go the extravagant habits unlimited supply created, for this wasteful practice is putting a drain on our forests that, unless stopped, will eventually tend to raise the price of long-length lumber, and so to increase construction costs to all builders.

"This dissipation of capital, this unnecessary drain on the nation's forest resources, is a matter for serious regard. Indeed, since the production of short lengths at the sawmill is unavoidable, prospective builders should consider themselves under obligation to use these short lengths to the utmost extent.

"Such a demand would react favorably on logging operations through permitting a more efficient cross-cutting of the felled trees; on mill operations through affording a more efficient utilization of the logs hauled to the mill, and on wholesale and retail distribution by stimulating home building through lowered costs.

"While the individual consumer can do much to foster this demand, the responsibility for making short-length utilization actually effective in practice rests particularly with manufacturers, distributers, architects and contractors, who so largely control the opportunities of the public to gain the economic benefits from a wider use of short-length lumber.

What Constitutes Short-Length Lumber.

"'Short-length lumber' is that which is less than eight feet long. Pieces of six and seven feet form part of the standard output of practically every saw and planing mill; lengths of four and five feet are less frequently regarded as a salable portion of the mill output; lengths of two and three feet are discarded except by those lumber manufacturers who handle the more valuable species of wood or who have worked up specialized markets for these pieces; yet all of this material is of high intrinsic value as respects quality and accuracy of manufacture, is admirably suited to many uses, and under present market conditions is economical. Notwithstanding which, lengths less than eight feet seldom are specified in standard commercial practice.

"The production of short lengths in saw and planing mills is as inevitable as the production of sawdust, shavings or bark. In the expansion of the demand for this short lumber—often the finest clear wood in the log—lies economy for the logger, the millman and the consumer.

Big Saving to Home Builder.

"To the consumer the use of short lengths would mean an appreciable saving, since it is the general practice of mills throughout the United States to quote short lengths 15 to 35 per cent. below the prices asked for standard lengths of equal grade.

"The industries of the United States manufacturing wood articles now absorb about one-tenth of the present short-length lumber output of the mills.

"They could without difficulty absorb five times as much—that is, 50 per cent. of the present short-length output. This would, however, still leave 50 per cent. of the present unavoidable production and all of the potential mill production of short lengths for consumption in other avenues, and outlets for it lie chiefly in the building and construction industries, inasmuch as they consume over two-thirds of all softwood lumber sawn in the United States. In expansion of the demand for short-length lumber for construction work, then, lies the solution of the short-length marketing problem.

"Every year $3,000,000,000 is invested in small houses and farm buildings in the United States. Employment of short-length lumber in these structures would mean a saving to the small-home owners and farmers of tens of millions of dollars annually. This is not guesswork; the survey on which this report is based demonstrated its truth in actual computations, and the tables in which these computations are summarized put the actual dollars-and-cents savings squarely before the prospective home owner through pointing out definite instances where the use of short-length lumber is feasible.

Waste Elimination a Public Duty.

"The annual wastage of millions of dollars of the nation's forest resources should not be passed over lightly, especially when that wastage is avoidable and its elimination would mean dollars-and-cents savings to the small-home builders of our country.

"If so simple an act as the substitution of short-length lumber for long lengths where practicable in the erection of the typical small house or farm structure will lessen this drain on the national wealth and release millions of dollars of investment capital for further home building, then a duty rests on producers and consumers alike to see that full advantage is taken of this avenue for thrift. The extravagant practices of earlier times have no place in the national economy of today.

"The timber resources of the country in Government and private ownership are in the nature of a public trust. Just as the public is entitled to and does share in the benefits derived from properly managed public trusts, it is entitled to and will receive direct benefits from the proper care and use of our timber resources. Since every citizen will share in the benefits, this movement should enlist the active interest and whole-hearted support of the American public."

COKING OF OIL SHALES.

Commerical Development Investigated by Bureau of Mines.

The formation of coke during the retorting of "coking" grades of oil shale can be prevented most effectively by using enough non-coking shale in the retort charge, states the Bureau of Mines, which is conducting investigations which may point the way toward the commercial development of the nation's tremendous oil shale reserves. This precaution is especially practicable in the United States, as most of the deposits of oil shale in this country contain "non-coking" as well as "coking" beds.

The fusing or coking property of a shale does not seem to bear any direct relationship to the yield or the quality of the oil produced from the shale, but leaf shales rarely form troublesome cokes. For example, when a sample from the mahogany stratum near Grand Valley, Col., was retorted by the Bureau of Mines it shrunk to two-thirds of its original volume and seemed to melt down, forming a dense, hard coke that adhered most tenaciously to the retort walls, whereas a very rich oil shale from Elko, Nev., did not show the slightest tendency to coke or stick to the walls of the retort. A massive black shale from near the top of the Green River formation in Colorado (about 600 or 700 feet higher in the series than the mahogany shale) formed a fairly strong coke which did not stick to the walls of the retort.

The leaner shales that lie in the same stratum on either side of the coking mahogany shale do not coke, but the non-coking property of these shales may be due to the larger percentage of inorganic matter in them rather than to differences in the character of the organic constituents. An Australian oil shale giving an oil yield of 120 gallons to the ton had only a slight tendency to coke, but stuck together after retorting. A sample of Brazilian "turfa" yielding 115 gallons per ton formed a weak, friable coke. A 50-gallon shale from Soldier Summit, Utah, did not coke at all.

The Bureau of Mines investigators conclude that the fusing or coking property of shales does not bear any direct relationship to the yield or quality of the oil produced from the shale.

The results of this study of the coking of oil shales are contained in Bureau of Mines Technical Paper 398, by W. L. Finley and A. D. Bauer. Copies of Technical Paper 398, which is one of a series giving the results of oil shale investigations conducted by the Bureau of Mines in cooperation with the State of Colorado, may be obtained from the Superintendent of Documents, Washington, D. GOOD ROADS ADD TO REALTY VALUES

FARM ACREAGE ADVANCING

Realtors and Road Builders Called Progressive Combination for State Growth.

Some striking incidences of rising values in real estate due to the extensive highway improvements in New Jersey were related by Edward B. Loughran, traffic supervisor of the New Jersey Highway Department, to the members of the realty board of that State at their recent convention in Atlantic City. He also predicted steadily increasing values.

"Due to the accessibilities and the further promised accessibilities of every part of New Jersey over our new good roads from the bridges and the tunnel on each side of the State there is bound to result a great real estate boom through the entire State," said Mr. Loughran. "When the State highway program is completed it will form a network of serviceable, hard-surfaced roads embracing a primary and a secondary system of nearly 2,000 miles. In the primary system there will be 23 routes with 1,247 miles. In the secondary system 22 routes of 634 miles. The layout is so mapped as to take care of through traffic, separate local and through traffic, avoid congested areas, and so parallel some routes as to provide more than one route or artery between all the important traffic centres of the State."

In speaking of land value changes, Mr. Loughran stated that a county official eleven years ago bought a farm for $70 an acre on the line of Route 20, near Woodbury. He sold it for $600 an acre. Another purchaser bought 240 acres of ground on the same route near Cooper Street twenty years ago and paid $32,000. He was offered as soon as the road was improved more than $140,000 and refused. He was since offered $240,000 and will not sell.

"Around Woodbury an acre could be bought before improvement for $300," added Mr. Loughran, "but after the hard-surfacing of Route 20 land cannot be bought for $1,500 an acre. Houses with some repairing, such as shingling, painting, some carpenter work, a sun parlor addition, have increased in value of selling price from $1,000 and $1,500 to $5,000 and $6,000.

"On Route 6, south of Woodbury, a friend had eighteen lots which he sold for $150 a lot, 50 by 162 feet. This land formerly was valued at $50 an acre. In Salem County, on Route 18, between Elmer and Malaga, before the road was taken over, one could buy all the land he wanted for $5 an acre. This was when you could hardly get through on old earth roads, and now it is $400 an acre and up, and the road, while under State maintenance, is only gravel. When it is concreted it will be more than $500 a lot.

"Likewise at Penns Grove a plot of ground was bought shortly after Route 18 was taken over for $300 an acre. It was selling for $10 an acre fifteen years ago, and the owner expects to get $500 a lot for it soon.

"In Cumberland County, on Route 6, between Shiloh and Bridgeton, land was $75 a lot some years ago. Now it is $1,000 a lot, the old gravel roads having been concreted.

"You can see real estate developments in Cape May County and all around the outskirts of Atlantic City, up the coast along Route 4 from Absecon to Rahway, due to the new, hard-surfaced roads.

"The real esate operators and the Highway Department with its highways are a sort of inter-related, progressive combination. The Highway Department with new roads provides the accessibility and the real estate operators provide the development, but both create the values."

Mr. Loughran explained that after adopting the $40,000,000 bond issue in 1922, the Highway Department in 1923 designated 10 routes of 315 miles. Additional routes have since been added, so that at the present time the department has on its program 41 routes with a total of 1,459 miles. Of this, 878 miles have been taken over by the State.

"When it is considered that some of the traffic on the State highways has increased 260 per cent. since 1921," he added, "it shows how imperative the adoption of the highway plan is. With the adoption of universal traffic regulations on these roads under State highway supervision it can readily be seen by practical real estate men what a boon it is going to be to New Jersey real estate. These roads will permit motorists of neighboring States to enjoy to the fullest such automobile service as will come about under State-wide traffic regulation and our splendid road system and more will be immediately attracted by its advantages.

"New roads create a greater pride in every locality, and since the old roads have been improved by the Highway Department all along them can be seen home owners repainting their old places, repairing and putting them in good condition. When these changes are made it is not long before new values are created."

MEASURES HEAT OF GAS.

Simple Recording Calorimeter Invented by Professor Parr.

A simple instrument for measuring the heat-producing value of manufactured gas has been developed by Professor S. W. Parr of the University of Illinois, according to the announcement of the American Chemical Society.

"The outstanding need of the gas industry is a recording calorimeter which will give at once, as the manufactured gas leaves the retorts or generators, its calorific value, instead of waiting till the gas holder is full and the distribution of gas from the works to the far edge of town brings in a report from the housewife that the gas is so poor it will not burn," asserts Professor Parr. "It is then too late to remedy the defect."

Professor Parr describes an instrument of the flow type, which does its own metering, and automatically controls the temperature and pressure of the water and gas passing through the apparatus.

"The burner is of the ordinary Bunsen type, and its heat is imparted to the equivalent volume of water" he explains. "Under the conditions of control, therefore, as to temperature and pressure, a single constant for the instrument is obtained, which can be applied directly to the differential thermometric readings and thus transferred to a recording instrument of standard type."

GROUP IN CONGRESS TO ASK FUNDS NOW FOR NEW CRUISERS

NAVY PROGRAM OF 1924

Edwards Will Demand Inclusion of Those Three Vessels in the Senate Naval Bill.

UPSET OF RATIO DISCLOSED

Data Submitted to Coolidge Show This Country in Third Place in Cruiser Strength.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 19.—President Coolidge's acquiescence in the program of Chairman Butler of the House Naval Committee for the construction of ten 10,000-ton cruisers, involving an ultimate expenditure of $140,000,000 if carried into effect, is generally pleasing to members of Congress who feel that the American Navy should not continue to lag behind Great Britain and Japan in this class of naval vessels.

The plan to merely "authorize" these cruisers, however, without granting appropriations for three cruisers of such displacement "authorized" in 1924, but for which no funds have yet been granted, does not meet the situation, in the opinion of members of Congress interested in the proper maintenance of naval strength.

These members believe that the authorization of cruisers "without appropriations" is merely a provision for new cruisers and that other powers undergoing ahead in cruisers will regard the ten-cruiser program as a "bluff" unless accompanied by appropriations, as their keels cannot be laid until money is appropriated.

The opinion was expressed that there should be an immediate appropriation for the ten cruisers authorized in the Butler bill.

Senate Amendment Promised.

An indication of the attitude of these members of Congress was given tonight by Senator Edwards of New Jersey, a member of the Senate Naval Committee, who served notice that unless the House appropriates money with which to start the three cruisers of the 1924 program, which, although authorized two years ago, cannot be begun until Congress provides an appropriation, he would offer an amendment to the bill, with that object in view, when the measure reaches the Senate.

"It is about time that President Coolidge came to a realization of the fact that the United States is being outdistanced in the matter of naval preparedness," said Senator Edwards.

"I have only one criticism to offer concerning the President's approval of the construction of ten cruisers instead of the three authorized for future construction, and that is authorization for construction should take effect immediately instead of 'in the future.'

"If Chairman Butler of the House Naval Affairs Committee does not find it expedient to include such authorization in the pending naval appropriation bill, I, as a member of the Senate Naval Affairs Committee, shall offer an amendment providing for an immediate authorization.

For Pressure on Budget Bureau.

"I am further of the opinion that if the Bureau of the Budget persists in its refusal to sanction estimates on the three cruisers already authorized, General Lord should be instructed by either the President or the Congress to furnish such estimates at the earliest convenient date.

"It is about time America awoke to the fact that the leading European and Asiatic powers have paid small heed to the overtures from Washington that naval armaments be limited. I am aware of no disposition on the part of any of the great powers to limit naval armaments and until fulfillment supplants promise, the Navy of the United States should equal, if not excel, any of the civilized world.

"With hatreds and animosities aimed at this country from every corner of the globe, Uncle Sam is in no position to lose his mastery of the seas, and without cruisers of the most advanced and modern types, this mastery cannot endure. This argument applies equally to our air forces, which today are inadequate to serve even for reconnoitring purposes in time of war or threatened invasion."

1924 Program Lapsing in July.

Senator Edwards pointed out that that three of the eight authorized in 1924 are still in the mere "authorization" class, the President having decided not to include in this year's budget any recommendations for appropriations for them.

The Naval act of Dec. 18, 1924, which "authorized" the construction of eight 10,000-ton light cruisers, directed that it be undertaken prior to July 1, 1927. Consequently, if these vessels are not appropriated for at this session of Congress, the authorization for the three whose construction has not commenced would lapse next July, unless the time for building them is extended.

At Friday night's conference at the White House between Chairman Butler and Representatives Andrew, Vinson and Drewery of the House Naval Committee with the President, it was pointed out that other Powers are going ahead with the construction of light cruisers and that some of the Powers signatory to the Washington Arms Conference Treaty were not living up to the "spirit" of that convention.

There was no limit imposed by that treaty on the number of light cruisers

French Urged to Educate Americans on Good Wines

PARIS, Dec. 19 (AP).—The taste for wines of the American traveler in Europe has degenerated alarmingly in the last few years, says the newspaper "The Good Wine of France" [Le Bon Vin de France], which appeals to waiters and restaurant proprietors to help their foreign guests to a better understanding of the French vintages.

The question is serious, the newspaper continues, for wealthy foreigners, especially Americans, insist upon buying famous vintages and "drinking them like water," while the pained Frenchman who cannot afford the price sits by with sadness in his heart.

"Drink the good, sound, ordinary wines if your palate is not educated to the marvelous distinctions of the finer ones," says the newspaper.

LITHUANIAN UPSET FOILED A RED PLOT

New Regime Says Bolsheviki Had Planned for a Revolt In January.

SMETONA IS PRESIDENT

He Takes Oath to Stand by the Constitution—New Ministry Is Named.

Copyright, 1926, by The New York Times Company.
Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

RIGA, Dec. 19.—The revolt in Lithuania appears to have been completely successful. The new Government assumed office yesterday with M. Smetona, the first President of the republic, again elected President. He took the oath to stand by the Constitution. The new Ministry follows:

PREMIER and MINISTER OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS—Professor Voldemaras.
MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR—M. Rostersas.
MINISTER OF FINANCE—Dr. Karvelis.
MINISTER OF WAR—Colonel Merkis.
MINISTER OF EDUCATION—Dr. Byetrus.
MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE—M. Aleksa.
MINISTER OF COMMUNICATIONS—M. Jaucierias.
MINISTER OF JUSTICE—M. Shillingas.
STATE CONTROLLER—M. Milchus.

The new régime has been at great pains to find legal and constitutional forms for all its actions following the coup d'état. It began by inducing the overthrown Premier, M. Glezevicius, to resign, and the President, Dr. Grinius, to authorize Professor Valdemaras to form a Ministry according to the Lithuanian Constitution.

New President Is Elected.

It was also hoped to obtain the voluntary resignation of the President, but meanwhile Major Plekhavicius, who conducted the "putsch," offered the Nationalist leader, M. Smetona, the post of Chief of State, which M. Smetona accepted until the question is settled by popular vote.

The next step was to summon Parliament, which met last night. Only forty members, all belonging to the Right groups, assembled, with Speaker M. Stolgaitis, a member of the Left, who, after at first refusing, eventually agreed formally to open Parliament.

Parliament received and approved the resignations of President Grinius and of Speaker Stolgaitis. It then elected M. Stulgansky, former President of the republic, as the new Speaker and proceeded to elect a new President of the republic. M. Smetona received 38 votes to 2 against. He took the oath and, escorted by cavalry, triumphantly proceeded to the Presidential residence.

Military Charge a Red Plot.

Official posters and statements declare that the military resorted to the coup d'état as the only way to avert the "catastrophe" to which the Government was steering the country. Early in January, it is said, the Lithuanian Communists, financed from abroad, intended to attempt a Bolshevist "putsch." It is added that the deposed Government knew of this intention, but made no effort to thwart it.

According to the latest news, the feared dissension in the army proved

SUBWAY FARE RISE, END OF 'ELEVATED,' STUDIED BY BOARD

Some Members of State Body Reported to Incline Toward a Higher Rate.

WOODEN CARS TO GO, TOO

Justification for an Advance Said to Be Seen Only in Improvements.

EXPERTS PRESENT FIGURES

Untermyer May Return From Trip Within a Month—Inquiry to Start Then.

Methods of "scrapping" the elevated railroads of the city, or most of them, and the elimination of wooden cars on the city's rapid transit lines will be considered by the Transit Commission in connection with the preparation of its readjustment plan, it was learned yesterday.

While the commission, of course, has reached no decision on the fare question and will reach none before the end of its investigation, some of its members are understood to believe that an increased fare may be necessary. Justification for such an increase, it is believed, will be found only through improved service and by such improvements as the removal of the elevated structures.

The possibility of a 10-cent or an 8-cent fare has been considered in this connection, but those advocating an increase of this magnitude have been careful to explain that their idea is that the major part of the increase should go into a fund for the purchase by the city of the elevated lines, with a view to scrapping them.

Would Raise Vast Fund.

Accountants of the commission have estimated that a one-cent increase in the car fare would bring an increase in revenue on the rapid transit lines of at least $22,000,000 a year. They also have estimated that a fare of six and one-half cents should be sufficient to pay all operating charges and interest and amortization on the bonded indebtedness of the companies and the city.

It has been suggested that, if a ten-cent fare were fixed, the remaining three and one-half cents might be placed in a fund for the replacement of elevated railroads by subways, the elimination of wooden cars, and other improvements. Such a fund, it has been calculated, would amount to approximately $77,000,000 a year, and at the end of a ten-year period, with interest, to nearly a billion dollars.

The possibility of getting property owners who would be benefited by the replacement of elevated lines by subways to agree to pay all or part of the cost will be investigated. Such a course was followed in the case of the Sixth Avenue elevated, and a majority of the adjoining property owners agreed to bear the cost of the proposed removal of the elevated structure.

The investigation proper will begin immediately after the return of Samuel Untermyer, who left on a cruise around the world on the steamship Belgenland immediately after the announcement of his appointment. Mr. Untermyer, who took with him the records of the McAneny, McAvoy and Thompson transit investigations, is expected to return at an earlier date than that originally set. Members of he commission, who have been in touch with Mr. Untermyer since his departure, would not be surprised if he should return within a month.

Mayor Firm on 5-Cent Fare.

Mayor Walker said last night that so far as the fare question was concerned, the matter was one for the city and the transit companies, rather than the Transit Commission, to decide, and that until his policy of "do it with shovels" had been proven untenable he would hold his ground for the 5-cent fare.

"This is no time for the Transit Commission to come out one way or the other," he said. "If its findings after its investigations prove that the 5-cent fare cannot be maintained, then

Steamship West Celina Is Afire at Sea, But Notifies Boston Blaze Is Controlled

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Dec. 19.—With a large part of her cargo afire and her officers and crew exhausted by more than thirty-two hours of continuous labor in keeping the flames from spreading, the United States Shipping Board steamship West Celina tonight was battling through heavy seas and freezing weather toward Boston Harbor. The latest radio message from Captain Frank Stevens of the West Celina said that the vessel probably would reach this port about noon tomorrow.

Executives of the Boston ship brokerage firm of Rogers & Webb, managers for the Shipping Board of the Yankee Line, of which the West Celina is one of a fleet of eight steamships, will arrange this morning to provide aid for the crew of the vessel on her arrival. It is possible that municipal fireboats will be sent down the harbor to meet her, although the latest wireless from Captain Stevens, received in this city this afternoon, said the fire was under control.

Captain Stevens and practically all of the crew of forty men aboard the West Celina are residents of Greater Boston. The steamship is of about 8,800 tonnage, 440 feet long, and plies a regular route between Baltimore and Norfolk, on this side, and Hamburg and Bremen in Germany.

Carrying a large cargo, consisting mostly of cotton, grain and tobacco, the West Celina left Norfolk last Thursday night. Yesterday, when about 150 miles south of Nantucket Shoals Light, fire was discovered in No. 2 cargo hold. At that time the seas were very heavy, the wind was strong and the temperature not much above zero.

The first radio message from the steamship was received about 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon. It merely said that the cargo was afire and the vessel had turned back and was making for Boston, the nearest large port.

Another wireless was received here this morning from Captain Stevens saying the fire had been brought under control, and this afternoon came a third message, notifying the steamship agents that the West Celina would probably arrive in Boston Harbor about noon tomorrow.

No radio appeals for aid from other vessels were sent out by the West Celina, and the brief wireless messages received in Boston contained no details except those already related, according to the Yankee Line managers.

Ruling That Authoress Must Copyright Under Her Husband's Name Stirs Women

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 19.—The right of a married woman to take out a copyright in her own name has been denied by the Copyright Division of the Library of Congress, and members of the National Woman's Party are aroused over the action taken.

The case in issue is that in which, by a ruling of William D. Brown, Assistant Register of Copyright, Mrs. V. D. Hyde of Denver, Col., who for nearly twenty years has been obtaining copyrights for poems and plays in her maiden name, under which she has always written, has been informed that no further copyrights will be issued to her except under her husband's name.

Mrs. Hyde has taken the matter up with the National Woman's Party and a committee of officers of the party, under the leadership of Mabel Vernon, National Executive Secretary, will hold a conference with Register Thorvald Solberg in his office tomorrow afternoon.

Fannie Hurst has been in communication with Mrs. Hyde, and Ruth Hale, President of the Lucy Stone League, is interesting herself in the question and referred Miss Hyde to the National Woman's Party. The right of a married woman to use her own name on a passport was established by the National Woman's Party when it obtained a ruling to that effect from the State Department. In denying Mrs. Hyde a copyright under her maiden name, the Copyright Division stated that it had made the following ruling:

"Registrations by married women should be made in their married name, that is, the given name of the wife followed by the husband's name. This is in accordance with the general recognized practice of all Government offices as well as all courts, and to deviate from it would cause confusion to the copyright records and probably embarrass the copyright claimant herself if the copyright came into litigation."

If this ruling is sustained by Register Solberg the Woman's Party, its officers say, will proceed as it did in the case by which it won the right of a married woman to use her own name on a passport and submit a brief by Mrs. Burnita Sheldon Matthews, attorney for the party.

POWDER BLAST HURTS 18 IN TRAIN WRECK

300 Kegs Explode When Fire in Derailed Freight at Peck's Crossing Reaches Them.

THREE HOUSES SHATTERED

Church at Towners Also Is Badly Damaged and Near-By Towns Are Shaken.

Special to The New York Times.

DANBURY, Conn., Dec. 19.—Eighteen persons were hurt, some of them seriously; three houses were wrecked, a church a third of a mile distant was damaged and trees in woods near by were stripped of branches and bark today by the explosion of 300 kegs of black powder in a fire which followed the derailment of twenty-four freight cars of the Central New England Railroad at Peck's Crossing, a half mile west of Towners, N. Y., seventeen miles from Danbury.

The 300 kegs of powder were in one of the freight cars, which was telescoped into the others down an embankment eighteen feet deep and across the two tracks. Trainmen and residents of Towners were throwing buckets of water and snow on the fire in an effort to keep the flames from reaching the powder when the explosion occurred.

The home of former State Senator James E. Towner, a quarter of a mile distant; the home of Mrs. C. C. Peck, 1,000 feet away, and the home of Ward Rogers, 500 feet away, were demolished. The Baptist Church of Towner, 1,500 feet distant, was thrown out of plumb and its stained glass windows and plastering shattered. All four members of the Rogers family, including their twin son and daughter, 13 years old, were hurt.

List of the Injured.

The most seriously hurt was H. A. Christinger of Hopewell Junction, N. Y., trainmaster of the Central New England, who had come from that town, eight miles distant, on a locomotive to direct the fighting of the fire. He was burned and cut, and was taken to his home. Others whose injuries were considered serious were Lorraine Rogers, 13 years old; her father, Ward Rogers, 40 years old, both of whom received cuts on the head, face and arms, and Clifford H. Lundie, 35 years old, of Danbury, a conductor, who was a passenger on the freight train. He was taken to Danbury Hospital suffering from concussion of the brain.

The others injured were:

COLE, MINNIE B., 50 years old, bruises and shock.
O'HARA, ALFRED, 7 years old, cuts on head.
O'HARA, ANNA, 30 years old, cuts on face and arms.
O'HARA, PETER, 55 years old, cuts on arms and head.
PECK, Mrs. C. C., 75 years old, cuts on body.
ROGERS, Mrs. MILDRED B., 40 years old, cuts on face.
ROGERS, RAYMOND B., 13 years old, cuts on body.
ROBINSON, LOUISE G., 75 years old, cuts over eyes and head.
ROBINSON, Mrs. MABEL, 30 years old, cuts on head and arms.
RUNDLE, LEONA, 70 years old, cuts and shock.
RUNDLE, Mrs. S. D., 48 years old, bruises and shock.
RUNDLE, S. D., 50 years old, bruises and shock.
SHIELDS, J. J., 48 years old, of Hartford, conductor of train, cuts and bruises.

Train Composed of Thirty-six Cars.

The freight train, eastbound from Maybrook to Boston, was composed of thirty-six cars. Included in the dangerous freight with the car of powder was a tank car filled with gasoline, but they were separated by seventeen cars. The train reached Peck's Crossing a few minutes after 11 A. M. The seventh car, two cars behind the tank car, in some unexplained way became uncoupled from the cars ahead, jumped the track and, dragging twenty-three other cars with it for 500 feet along the roadbed, tearing up ties and track, plunged over the embankment to the north of the rails. All the cars except the final six followed, each crashing into the one ahead until all had piled into a heap 30 feet high and were thrown across the tracks.

All the trainmen were in the caboose at the rear and were not hurt then.

The fire started immediately. One trainman ran to Towners to telephone for wrecking crews from Danbury.

HILL WILL OFFER NEW WET MEASURE

Maryland Man to Introduce Today Bill Permitting States to Set Intoxicating Limit.

IN LINE WITH REFERENDUM

Bill Seeks Extension of Farmers' Cider and Wine Privileges—Wheeler Excoriates Wets.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 19.—Another move to modify the prohibition law so as to permit the sale of light wines and beer will be made in the House tomorrow by Representative John Philip Hill of Maryland, spokesman of the beer bloc in that body.

The bill will stipulate that the penalties of the Volstead act shall not apply for manufacturing, selling, transporting, importing or exporting beverages not intoxicating in fact, as determined by State law. It will expressly provide that beverages shall not be shipped from one State to another unless the laws in each permit the sale of a product "not intoxicating in fact."

Coincidental with this new manoeuvre, Wayne Wheeler, general counsel of the Anti-Saloon League of America, tonight charged that the wets not only want to bell the prohibition cat, but to starve it so it can't catch the liquor mice. He declared "the wets may be relied upon to throw every available banana peel in the way of enforcement."

"Belling the prohibition cat," he asserted, "was the real reason for the objection of the wets to the $500,000 item in the appropriation bill for advance expenses to prohibition agents who secure evidence against dry law violators.

"The purpose of this attack of the wets," said Mr. Wheeler, "is the same as that behind the wet bills introduced in this session of Congress or advocated by them. Anything that will interfere with enforcement is welcomed by this group. Congressman LaGuardia wants State option on control of the liquor traffic, with a minimum alcoholic content set by Congress. Congressman Black wants cooperative associations to make and sell beer and wine, ignoring the constitutional bar to these. Senator Edwards wants the Eighteenth Amendment repealed by conventions, which are easier to handle than regular legislative bodies. Mr. Gallivan wants a national referendum to find out what the people wish in regard to prohibition. The rest of Congress knows where the nation stands, as was shown when he got only twelve votes for his recent attempt to hamstring an enforcement measure."

Regulation by the States.

Mr. Hill's new proposal, if adopted by Congress, would in a measure turn over to the States regulation of the liquor traffic and lead, in his opinion, to passage of laws in conformity with its provisions in States where sentiment is hostile to national prohibition.

According to Mr. Hill, this plan of modification would be "in accordance with the terms of the referendum adopted by a huge majority in New York and Illinois in the recent election."

"On May 26, 1926," said Mr. Hill, "the Committee on Modification of the Volstead act, the unofficial committee of sixty members of the House, decided that that committee favored modification of the Volstead act as follows: 'The Federal act to enforce the Eighteenth Amendment is hereby modified so that the same shall not prohibit the manufacture, sale, transportation, importation or exportation of beverages which are not in fact intoxicating, as determined in accordance with the laws of the respective States.' This statement of position is an exact quotation from the non-partisan referendum afterward submitted to the people of New York in the recent election and favorably voted upon by an enormous majority.

"I am proposing an amendment to the Volstead act carrying out the expression of the New York referendum in Section 29 of the Volstead act after the clause in such section which specifically gives to the farmers of the United States the right to make 2.75 per cent. cider and home-made wine of any alcoholic content, just so long as a jury does not say that this home-made wine is capable of producing drunkenness when taken in sufficient quantities—that is to say, taken in such

Wife of Watch Manufacturer Wounds W. M. Probasco in Quarrel, Turns Gun on Self.

TRAGEDY IN PARK AV. HOME

Shooting Laid to Her Anger at Break Because He Had Become Reconciled With Wife.

FAMILIES LONG DIVIDED

Mrs. Ingersoll Had Been Married 22 Years, Wounded Man 14—He Is in Bellevue Seriously Hurt.

Mrs. Robert Hawley Ingersoll, wife of the retired watch manufacturer, was found dead with a bullet through her breast yesterday afternoon in her apartment at 55 Park Avenue. Lying on the floor of an adjoining room was Wallace M. Probasco of 72 Irving Place with two bullet wounds in his breast and with his right arm broken by another bullet. Mr. Probasco was still living and was rushed to Bellevue Hospital seriously hurt. At midnight he recovered consciousness, and his chances for life were considered to be improved.

According to the police, Mrs. Ingersoll had once before threatened to shoot Probasco. Probasco considered going to the District Attorney with a complaint, but he and Mrs. Ingersoll made up. The police found an indication yesterday that Mrs. Ingersoll might have planned some sort of violence in advance in the presence of three boxes of cartridges in her writing desk.

Mrs. Ingersoll was 55 years old. Mr. Probasco is 60. According to the police, Mrs. Ingersoll shot Probasco in a quarrel over his expressed intention to end their relationship and then killed herself. Notwithstanding the statement of the police that the woman's death was a clear case of suicide, Probasco was placed in the prison ward at Bellevue with a technical charge of homicide against him awaiting the outcome of the investigation.

The shootings according to information gleaned by the detectives, came at the breaking point of a relationship which had sprung up between Mrs. Ingersoll and Mr. Probasco when both were well along in years and which had divided the two families.

Had Reached Reconciliation.

Probasco and his wife had effected a reconciliation Saturday night, according to a statement later made by Mrs. Probasco, and news of this, which Probasco carried to Mrs. Ingersoll yesterday, enraged her and inspired the quarrel and the shooting.

Probasco had seen little of Mrs. Ingersoll for some time, it was understood last night, and had intimated to her that he hoped to go back to his wife before Christmas. According to Jonah J. Goldstein, an attorney for Mrs. Probasco, Probasco had lent $12,000 to Mrs. Ingersoll and had taken as collateral mortgages on property she owned in Green Bay, Wis. Several days ago she telephoned Mr. Probasco and asked him if he intended pressing her for the money. Probasco called and their financial affairs were arranged. Then Probasco told her of his intention to leave her.

Mrs. Ingersoll had been married to the watch manufacturer, now 67 years old, for twenty-two years.

Mrs. Ingersoll, it was said last night, had been previously married and divorced before her marriage to the manufacturer. Before her marriage she lived in Green Bay.

Probasco had been married for fourteen years. Mrs. Probasco's maiden name was Maud Ingersoll and she is the daughter of the late Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll, the famous agnostic, and a sister of Mrs. Wallston H. Brown. She is not related to the family of the dead woman.

Both Mr. Ingersoll and Mrs. Probasco had known of the tie between the two. Mr. Ingersoll had continued to provide for his wife and occasionally had called upon her. A bent and white-haired old man, walking heavily with canes, he called at her apartment once more yesterday just after her body had been taken to the city morgue. Probasco and his wife also had re-

BERLIN, Dec. 19.—A revue called "Oh, U. S. A." and based entirely on what one newspaper notice calls "the bigotry, hypocrisy, record mania and capitalistic rapacity with which the United States is drenched" caused a sensation at its opening here last night.

None of the critics undertakes to explain why a musical show wholly devoted to assailing America and Americans should be staged in a city so friendly to America as Berlin affects to be, but most of them write favorably about it. Apparently its producer thinks attacking the United States ought to be popular with German audiences.

LONDON, Dec. 19.—The memorandum on war debts issued by the Faculty of Political Science of Columbia University is welcomed by the London newspapers, which give it considerable space, but it was received too late for extended editorial comment. One paper describes it as a memorable document and says it is significant of growing uneasiness in the United States over the war debt settlements with Europe. "This manifesto," says The Westminster Gazette, "is a sure sign of the tendency of thought of the American people, following as it does the remarkable petition issued by a leading Massachusetts lawyer, F. W. Peabody, last July."

Robert Boothby, M. P., parliamentary private secretary to the Chancellor of the Exchequer, Winston Churchill, made reference to the war debt settlements in an interview published today.

"Great Britain," he said, "has no money to spare and yet the whole objective of certain people is to squeeze money out of her. The United States, among others, has insisted on rigid repayment of the money borrowed from her to finance our allies in the war."

Mr. Boothby said emphatically that he did not wish to criticize the American debt settlement. If America wanted her pound of flesh, he said, she was entitled to demand it and Great Britain had no option but to give it, for she had to maintain her credit. "I do think, however," he added, "that the policy which has been pursued by the United States regarding war debts has been short-sighted, because it must in the long run retard the recovery of European trade and therefore of world prosperity."

Washington Cool to Debt Revision.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 19.—It cannot be said that official Washington today showed any positive reaction to the proposal of the Faculty of Political Science of Columbia University for International Conference to consider a readjustment of interallied debts growing out of the World War. On the surface of things, the official reaction is unsympathetic to the proposal. The Coolidge Administration is on record as adhering to the principle that these debts having been incurred, they should be paid within the ability of the debtor nations to pay, and that

STIRRING HATRED ABROAD

Must Some Day Consider Point of View of Debtors—Dr. Butler Backs the Proposal.

Forty-two members of the Faculty of Political Science, Columbia University, joined in a statement, made public yesterday, proposing an international debt and reparations conference to revise the war debt settlements on a basis of justice and generosity for the sake of world peace and prosperity. Sooner or later, the statement said, this country must take into consideration the point of view of the debtor nations, that the loans were not ordinary business transactions, but were contributions to a common cause against a common enemy.

The statement criticized the existing debt settlements as having produced dissatisfaction, distrust and misunderstanding among European nations to such an extent that the progress toward world peace made since Locarno might be lost and Europe might be prevented from rebuilding her war-shattered economic structure. Moreover, it asserted, European countries were coming to regard the United States with a deepening sense of grievance and growing odium because of our insistence upon the debt payments, with the result that we might find European hatreds concentrated in a coalition against us.

"Capacity to Pay" Heartless.

Characterizing the "capacity to pay" formula on which we have based the debt settlements as having a "hard and heartless sound," the statement declared it was unjust to fix the tax burdens of future generations by guesswork as to their nations' capacity to pay over a long period of years. Although it disclaimed advocacy of complete cancellation of the war debts, it asserted that the debt payments meant little to the average American taxpayers, as the payments due in the next four years, if applied entirely to reducing the personal income tax rate, would make a difference of only $2 a year to a typical taxpayer with a net income of $5,000 a year. In contrast to this "paltry gain" for the American taxpayer, the statement pointed out that the payments would constitute a crushing load on the already overtaxed debtor populations.

Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, President of Columbia University, issued a statement emphasizing the importance of the document from the Faculty of Political Science. He said that its signers were scholars and men of affairs in the front rank in the fields of economics, social science, history and public law, and that their statement had been carefully prepared.

Signers Neutral, He Says.

"There can be no higher or more disinterested authority than that which these gentlemen enjoy," Dr. Butler went on. "They are not closet philosophers, but men in active touch with every phase of practical life, including finance, industry, commerce and legislation.

"The American people hardly realize the enormous advance made toward the establishment of international security and peace during the year 1925. The word Locarno has become symbolic not only of progress but of an ideal which is no longer considered impracticable. This is due in chief measure to the fact that M. Briand, Dr. Stresemann and Sir Austen Chamberlain are not merely the heads of the foreign offices of three Governments whose interests have often been in competition or in conflict, but that these men have become close comrades, working with loyalty and devotion upon a common task. It is unthinkable that the people of the United States, with their traditions and their historic policies of international friendship and cooperation, will withhold any possible measure of support from this epoch-marking movement.

"This statement is in no sense a proposal for the cancellation of the debts or reparations. It is an argument for the re-study of these debts and reparations and of all the problems that are so closely related to them or that grow out of them in the light of most recent political and economic developments in Europe, this re-study to be made by or under the direction of an international conference summoned for that particular purpose.

"To Americans it will be of special interest to read again the letter addressed by Thomas Jefferson when Secretary of State to Mr. Hammond, Minister Plenipotentiary of Great Britain, under date of May 29, 1792, and still more, perhaps, the preliminary draft of that letter which was submit-

160 Orphan Girls Pray in Chapel for Firemen As Building Burns and Holiday Gifts Are Lost

KEARNY, N. J., Dec. 19. — While firemen fought for hours in the bitter cold this afternoon to subdue the flames that were burning the Sacred Heart Orphanage on Passaic Avenue, 160 little girl inmates prayed in a nearby chapel. Between frightened glances from the chapel windows at the clouds of smoke and the flames the little girls asked divine aid and safety for the firemen.

They were at dinner when the fire started. A nun smelled smoke and found the cellar in flames. She notified Sister Regina, Mother Superior, who went to the refectory and ordered every one to march to the chapel. Babies just big enough to toddle and sit at the table were picked up by the older girls. Not a child cried out or broke line as the girls, led by the nuns, marched to the chapel in safety. Before they had reached it, however, they knew what they had escaped, and by the time they had filed into their seats the firemen had arrived. Two alarms brought all the firemen in town. Water pressure was low, and efforts were directed not toward saving the main building of the orphanage, but toward protecting the other buildings, including the chapel. After four hours the flames were subdued and confined to the one building, which was destroyed. The records, including admittance and birth certificates of many of the children and all the clothes of the inmates except what they had on were lost. Also not a Christmas package was saved. Nevertheless, the little girls are happy tonight. Scattered in the homes of neighbors who offered to take them in, they are telling how their prayers helped the firemen save the chapel and other buildings.

The Kearny Lodge of Elks, which entertained them yesterday, offered its club house as a temporary asylum tonight, but because of the weather, those in charge decided to let the children stay in homes near the orphanage for the present.

TEXT OF THE STATEMENT.

We, the undersigned members of the Faculty of Political Science and Associated Schools of Columbia University, submit for impartial consideration the following statement:

In our judgment the war debts settlements are unsound in principle. Certainly they have created and are fostering a deep sense of grievance against us. We do not agree that the debts be completely cancelled. Whether there should be cancellation in whole or only in part depends on many complicated factors yet to be studied. What we do urge is complete reconsideration in the light of present knowledge. To this end we believe that an international conference should be called to review the entire problem of debt payments and make proposals for readjustment. This need not and should not in any way interfere with present negotiations nor the current operation of the Dawes plan. On the contrary, it would facilitate them. The proposed conference cannot be hurriedly improvised, but definite steps looking toward its organization would ease the present situation and we should find ourselves cooperating help fully and constructively with other nations upon terms of a lasting settlement.

A Turning Point in History.

In the last few months the nations of Western and Central Europe have made an unprecedented effort to rid themselves of the menace of future war. At present they are succeeding beyond all expectation. In proportion to their success the whole world will share in the benefits. If their great adventure fails, the whole world, including ourselves, will some day suffer incalculably.

The prime condition of the success of any such movement is mutual trust and understanding. Our war debt settlements have produced distrust and misunderstanding. When century-old political enmities are yielding to common sense, an international financial problem of recent origin, whatever its magnitude, should not be allowed to threaten the foremost gain in international relations since European nations began.

Our share in the war debt problem arose out of our entry into the war in 1917. True, we should have had no occasion for war had there been no European war. But the controversy as to the responsibilities of European powers for the outbreak of war in 1914 is not pertinent to that other question of why we went to war in 1917. America went into the war on an issue of its own. The casus belli for the United States was unrestrained submarine warfare, behind which lay—in 1917—an apprehension of decisive military and naval successes on the part of the Central powers imperiling the development of free institutions.

Our declaration of war was followed by the mobilization not only of our man-power but also of our material and financial resources. From the latter we made extensive advances to other nations fighting a common enemy. Thus arose the first phase of the war debt problem. It was at a time when we were straining every effort to hasten our own direct participation in the war. From the record of debates in Congress, it is clear that these advances were not regarded by those who voted them as business transactions, but rather as joint contributions to a common cause. But even if we did not have these statements, the grants themselves would have been justifiable upon no other ground. That the borrowers used the credits to help win their own wars is undoubtedly true but the reason that we loaned them the money was the fact that by so doing they were also helping us to win our war. If this were not so, it would mean that our Government diverted for the use of others vast sums of money and essential war supplies at a time when it was calling upon the country to make every possible sacrifice to maintain its own cause. The credits were freely given because they were to secure for us effective support for our own effort, either directly on the field of battle or indirectly by strengthening the nations associated with us. They would have been justified by no other purpose.

Not all of our war loans were used directly for military purposes. Some of them helped to feed and clothe civilian populations. Some provided permanent improvements useful after the war was over. Some of the loans were made after the armistice was concluded.

In the debt settlements we have made, insufficient account has been taken of those differences. The origin of various items in the debts was ignored. In justice and in reason they should have been considered.

The Debt Settlements.

The United States early abandoned the attempt to collect the full amount called for by the original debt contracts. The first formal step toward establishing a new basis of debt calculation was the creation of the Funding Commission by the Act of Congress of Feb. 9, 1922. According to this act, the Allies were to pay all debts in full but the rates of interest were reduced to 4½ per cent. The very first debt negotiations, those with Great Britain, showed that still further reduction was necessary, and "capacity to pay" became the basis of these subsequent negotiations. This was the formula used in the reparations section of the Versailles Treaty with reference to Germany. At best a vague and difficult formula, it has nevertheless, upon the whole, been applied in a very real effort to reach satisfactory settlements. The Secretary of the Treasury has stated that the cash values cancelled in the settlements with Great Britain, Italy, Belgium, and in that offered France, amount to $5,489,000,000. This means that the United States is now canceling about one-half the aggregate sum represented by the principal and interest of the original debts.

This partial cancellation would be generous to the extreme if the debts had been mere business transactions. It is nevertheless regarded by the debtor nations as not touching the heart of the issue. They hold in mind chiefly those credits which were used to wage war. They contend that they should not in fairness be required to repay advances that were expended for our benefit as well as for their own at a time when money was our only contribution. For over a year after our declaration of war their troops almost alone held the enemy in check. This was the critical period during which Germany, freed on the East, brought the whole weight of its power to break the Western front. During this supreme crisis, if the Allies had spared lives or if we had stinted supplies, our war as well as theirs might have been lost.

No attempt to reopen these pages of history was made in the negotiation of debt settlements. This was chiefly because the act creating our Debt Funding Commission allowed only limited discretion to that body. Moreover, there is no way to compare the value of supplies with that of lives sacrificed in war.

The points ignored in the official settlements, however, have been all the more accentuated in popular discussion. The controversy has ranged far beyond the question of money. The question of generosity between debtor and creditor has been discussed upon terms of what equivalent, moral or material, has been rendered for the sums advanced. To the minds of our debtors this is the core of the controversy. Sooner or later we shall be compelled to give consideration to this point of view.

But before addressing ourselves to the more vital aspects of the controversy we must call attention to serious defects in the existing settlements.

The Existing Settlements.

The existing settlements rest upon a basis which is itself open to question. The formula, "capacity to pay," which, in the case of ordinary debt adjustments, may be applied, to the possible benefit of both parties, proves difficult if not impossible of just application in the case of debts so vast as to reach over two or three generations. In most of the debt settlements the period agreed upon stretches forward sixty-two years. The estimates of capacity are, of necessity, based upon the statistics of the pre-war period and those of the abnormal post-war or reconstruction period. Obviously there are no figures for the future.

How impossible it is to estimate the relative economic "capacities" of nations for so long a period will be clear to anyone who looks back over the last sixty-two years. The steel industry of Germany, now far surpassing that of England, is almost entirely the product of the last half century. Similarly, other basic industries such as coal, wheat, cotton, rubber, potash, and even gold are in process of redistribution among the countries of the world. Nations today are changing their relative positions even more rapidly than in the past. How, then, can there be any degree of certainty in the estimates of future capacity, upon which this settlement so largely rests? It is surely unjust to fix the burdens of future generations on the basis of guesswork.

This injustice is all the more evident when one compares the various settlements and notes the wide discrepancies in liberality. On a 4½ per cent. interest basis France is to pay only 30 per cent., Belgium 54 per cent., of the whole debt (interest included). Great Britain is to pay 82 per cent. while Italy pays only 26 per cent. Whatever justification there may have been for differences in treatment of the various national debts, it is unfortunate that the principle, "capacity to pay," should result in such striking variations as these.

Still more regrettable is the impression which the formula conveys concerning our attitude as creditor. To exact a payment according to the capacity of the debtors seems to imply that the exaction is according to the full capacity to pay. If this basis of settlement had been rigorously applied, it would mean that we were threatening to lower materially the standard of living in Europe by taking tributs of their every possible saving for three generations to come. This is without doubt a wrong interpretation of the attitude of the creditor; but it is a natural, popular interpretation in the debtor countries. The phrase itself, "capacity to pay," rings hard and heartless.

As a matter of fact, it was partly to escape just this kind of international misunderstanding that negotiators dealt primarily with the interest instead of with the principal. The attention of the creditor could be drawn to the full amount of the principal, that of the debtors to the scaled-down interest or lessened annual payments. Unfortunately debtors and creditor looked at just the opposite items. The result is that dissatisfaction over the terms of the settlement has extended to a misunderstanding of motives. In the case of nations bound so closely and for so long to carry out agreements which seem to them unjust, this dissatisfaction may easily wreck the plans for world order and peace, according to which Europe is rebuilding its shattered economic fabric. Our debt settlements are part and parcel of a whole network of settlements between the other powers. It is clear that the whole matter should be re-examined on a basis, not of immediate expediency but of justice and of generous intention, that would give no reasonable ground for misunderstanding.

Some Economic Effects.

Before proceeding with the proposal for a revision of the debt policy let us see what are the economic effects of the present agreements. The political and moral issues are, as we have seen, of the greatest importance. But it will come as a surprise to many to find that the material interests involved, so far as we are concerned, are relatively small.

1. Our scheduled annual receipts from debt payments during the next four years will be less than 5 per cent. of either the present annual commodity imports or the present annual commodity exports of the United States. This percentage is smaller than the year-to-year fluctuations which have actually occurred in either exports or imports since the war.

2. The scheduled annual payments for the next few years will constitute, it is estimated, less than one-third of 1 per cent. of our annual national income. Even the increased payments called for in later years will not exceed one-half of 1 per cent. of the probable national income.

3. The scheduled annual debt payments will make much less difference in the American tax bill than is generally supposed. The payments due in the next four years amount to less than two dollars annually for each person in this country. They amount to less than 10 per cent. of the estimated yield of the Federal income tax of 1927; and if applied entirely to a reduction in the personal income tax rate, they would make a difference of only two dollars a year to a typical income taxpayer with net income of $5,000 a year. The latest tabulation shows that in 1924, 90 per cent. of the Federal income taxpayers paid on net incomes of less than $5,000.

4. Fulfillment of the debt agreements necessarily imposes on European debtors hardships much greater than the benefits that accrue to America. Great Britain, France, Italy and other European countries are already bearing burdens which strain their courage and strength. Taxation, in proportion to income and population, is between two and three times heavier in England, France and Italy than it is in the United States. Payments that could at best mean a paltry gain for most American taxpayers mean to the overtaxed debtors a crushing load.

A New Basis Possible.

We must substitute for the unfair and inappropriate principle of capacity to pay a full nad frank reconsideration of the debt and reparation problems, in an international conference to which all the countries concerned shall send representatives. To this conference the representatives of the United States should go, not with rigid instructions, like those hampering our Debt Commission, but with directions to determine what settlement compatible with the demands of justice would seem best calculated to promote the future peace and prosperity of the world. This is a joint enterprise. It calls for similar action by other nations and affects all international monetary operations directly caused by the war.

We realize that this statement has touched upon only a few of the many aspects of this complex question. We have said nothing about the legality of our claims to full payment. That is conceded by all of the debtor nations. We have passed over the fact that while the advances were made by the United States Government the means required were secured by issues of bonds to our own citizens, which bonds must be paid with interest whether or not the debtor nations make repayment. But to the extent that these advances were used by our associates to prosecute the war to our incalculable advantage, they seem to us like other war expenses, financed through bond issues rather than through revenues from taxation. We have said nothing of the special reason for moderation in our claims for repayment from Great Britain growing out of the loans she was making to our continental associates, also mainly to permit a more vigorous prosecution of the war, nor of her declared willingness to forego repayment from them in exact proportion to the extent that we relax our demand for repayment from herself. This aspect must be given due weight in any international debt conference. Finally, we have not attempted to estimate the gains made by our associates, territorial and other, through the Peace Treaty. Their losses were incomparably greater than ours. They have come out of the war crippled and impoverished. No sober-minded economist would think of claiming that their gains would offset more than a fraction of their losses, or that, should we cancel all the debts due us, their economic position would be raised to anything approaching ours.

There is one aspect of the question, however, that must not be ignored. Can any thoughtful American view with indifference the growing odium with which his country is coming to be regarded by our European associates? This would be distressing whatever the occasion; but when from the European point of view there is convincing justification for their unfavorable estimate of us, should we not welcome a chance to talk out our differences around a conference table? Evidence is accumulating week by week that our insistence on debt payment will cause the hatreds of which European countries are finding means to allay among themselves to be concentrated squarely against us. Already international trusts are being organized to compete with our industries in neutral markets. Already it is being pointed out that the reparation payments which threaten to hold Germany in financial bondage for two or three generations are necessary to permit the Allies to pay their war debts to us. A coalition of Europe against the United States might prove a good thing for Europe. Can any one believe that it would be a good thing for the United States? Thus the demands of justice are reinforced by the dictates of political expediency and the counsels of economic self-interest in urging us to meet halfway the countries of Europe in the International Debt and Reparations Conference which we here propose.

QUOTES JEFFERSON LETTER.

Dr. Butler Says It Shows Large-Minded View on Reparations.

Dr. Butler said last night that study of Jefferson's letter to the British Minister, which he referred to in his statement about the war debts, would be valuable to students as showing a point of view and state of mind which he regarded as large-minded and fine in dealing with a question of reparations. The letter dealt with British complaints regarding alleged violations of the treaty of peace which followed the Revolutionary War. Exile of loyalists and confiscation of their property, debts of Americans to British creditors, and the subject of interest on those debts were considered. The letter is 20,000 words long.

"I can assure you with truth," Jefferson wrote to the British Minister, "that we meet you on this occasion with the sincerest disposition to remove from between the two countries those obstacles to a cordial friendship which have arisen from an inexecution of some articles of the treaty of peace. The desire entertained by this country, to be on the best terms with yours, has been constant, and has manifested itself through its different form of administration, by repeated overtures, to enter into such explanations and arrangements as should be right and necessary to bring about a complete execution of the treaty. The same disposition leads us to wish that the occasion now presented should not be defeated by useless recapitulations of what had taken place anterior to that instrument."

At the end of the letter, in much the same tone, Jefferson wrote:

"These difficulties being removed from between the two nations, I am persuaded the interests of both will be found in the strictest friendship. The considerations which lead to it are too numerous and forcible to fail of their effect."

KENYON'S INHERITANCE SHRINKS TO $41,000

San Jose Blacksmith Expected $500,000, but Brother's Estate Was Overestimated.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 19.—The estate of Clarence A. Kenyon of Washington, who died two weeks ago, was at first estimated in reports from San Jose, Cal., at $6,000,000, but will amount to about $500,000, according to information received yesterday from the Register of Wills of the District of Columbia.

Reports from San José, the home of Russell P. Kenyon, a brother of the deceased, said the brother had received information from attorneys in this city that he would inherit about one-twelfth of the supposed $6,000,000 estate. Russell P. Kenyon is a blacksmith, and he is quoted as declaring that the news from Washington convinced him that Santa Claus actually did exist.

MIDDLETOWN, N. Y., Dec. 19.—The little Episcopal church on the Harriman estate at Arden was crowded today on the occasion of the memorial services conducted by the Rev. G. W. Members of the Harriman family were present. A bugler from West Point blew taps.

Yale Museum to Mount 'Old Bill,' Rhinoceros, Beside 'Fatima,' His Hippopotamus Circus Pal

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Dec. 19.—"Old Bill," the famous Indian armored rhinoceros, who spent nineteen years with the Ringling Brothers and Barnum and Bailey circuses, and whose recent death left only one armored rhinoceros in the United States, is to be placed in the Peabody Museum of Natural History at Yale, it was announced here today.

The Museum authorities ventured the opinion that "Old Bill" would not be "lonesome," for they also plan to place on exhibition "Fatima," the 2,000-pound hippopotamus that accompanied "Old Bill" around the country on his many trips, and who died not very long after he did.

"Old Bill" died very suddenly while the circus was at Fort Worth, Texas. The Peabody Museum has had an arrangement dating from the day when P. T. Barnum organized his first "exhibition of animals," whereby the body of an animal which is rare in this country, is to be given to Yale. The agreement has been continued by the Ringlin Brothers, and as a result a telegram was received not so long ago by Professor Richard S. Lull, Director of the Museum, notifying him of "Old Bill's" death in Forth Worth.

In view of the fact that the armored rhinoceros is a species almost extinct, Professor Lull immediately notified the circus that he would be glad to have the body for the museum, and at once despatched an expert taxidermist to Fort Worth. The taxidermist arrived there on a Friday, and, upon looking for the carcass, found that it had been placed in cold storage, and that "Old Bill" was, temporarily, at least, an icicle, although some used the word "iceberg."

About two days were spent in thawing out "Old Bill," while two days were spent in taking him apart, in cleaning and disjointing his bones, and preparing his 350-pound hide. His skeleton, which is to be rearticulated as in life, was packed in shavings, and shipped to New Haven. His hide, which is being tanned in New York, will be stretched over a papier-mâché mould in his likeness, and thus "Old Bill" will form two exhibits.

"Old Bill" was 22 years of age at the time of his death, weighed 2,500 pounds, and was considered one of the finest specimens in existence. The circus once had an offer of $30,000 for him, but declined. He was viewed by millions of people during his ten-year career in the sawdust, and, with "Fatima" by his side, will undoubtedly feel at home in the Peabody Museum, which is visited by thousands of people annually from every part of the world.

LONDON HAILS PLAN TO REOPEN DEBT

such arrangements as have been made should stand.

At the same time there has not been sufficient opportunity for officers of the Government and interested members of the Senate and House to study the proposal. Those who were approached were necessarily few and because they had not dissected and digested it, were unable to render any mature judgment as to the scope, character and practicability of the idea advanced. Such as were willing to express themselves, however, showed a distinctly unfavorable attitude toward having a conference as proposed.

The United States has held that each arrangement with an allied Government was a separate arrangement and should be adjusted separately in each case with the individual nation concerned. Nothing has developed to suggest any change in that view.

Officials Are Wary.

So far as Government officials were concerned, there was a disposition not to commit themselves other than to reiterate that the policy of this Government was definitely opposed to participation in an international conference which would give joint consideration to the problem. The impression conveyed was that officials felt that they should not enter into any discussion savoring of controversy with the Faculty of Political Science of Columbia University.

Among the officials who took this position was Garrard B. Winston, Under Secretary of the Treasury, who has been Secretary Mellon's right-hand man in the negotiations which led to debt funding agreements. Mr. Winston is Secretary of the American Allied War Debt Commission. The American Debt Commission, it is understood, considers the debt pacts that have been made as closed incidents, so far as it is concerned. As to the Treasury attitude toward a reopening of the agreements, attention was called to the fact that Secretary Mellon has stated that agreements are now out of the hands of the Debt Commission and that if there is to be any new policy it must be established by Congress.

Attention was also called to the statements made by Secretary Mellon in his annual report. In the course of a long discussion of the debt problem he said:

"With peace and the development of trade internally and externally, these settlements are quite workable. The principal fact is that settlements have been made and a fair trial can be had, not on theory but in practice. The debtor nations know what should be provided in their budgets and uncertainty is eliminated.

"From abroad has come again the suggestion that the indebtedness of the nations of Europe between themselves and with the United States should be canceled or should be pooled and a general settlement take place.

"There has been some repetition of this suggestion in the United States. This suggestion has been presented in various forms, but upon an analysis its essential bases seems to be a belief that advances of the United States during the war were in the nature of subsidies and were therefore not loans at all or that these advances were contributions to a joint undertaking and should be settled jointly by clearing one against the other.

"The position of the Debt Commission that the advances were loans to be repaid and that each debt must be funded on the basis of the capacity to pay off the particular debtor has been the consistent policy of the United States from the first.

"Until the war ended no intimation was made that these advances were subsidies, or that they were contributions to a joint cause, or that they would be the subject of a general pooling after the war."

Senator Reed Smoot of Utah, a member of the American Debt Commission, was caustic in his comment on the proposal of the Columbia Faculty. His only comment was:

"I think Congress will decide the settlement without the aid of those people. It would certainly feel able to do so."

Borah Sees More Cancellation.

Senator William E. Borah of Idaho, Chairman of the Committee of Foreign Relations, made more extended but not less unfavorable comment.

"I have only had time to scan hastily the discussion and consider the proposal," said Senator Borah. "We are very sensitive these days about two words—confiscation and cancellation—but we had just as well use them plainly, for we are doing both these things.

"We have confiscated, and are proposing further confiscation of, the property we seized during the war. We have canceled, and we are proposing to cancel, more of the international debts. We have canceled already about seven billion dollars of the financial obligations growing out of the war. A further conference for so-called readjustment means further cancellation.

"All this talk about readjustment, in the language of the man in the street, is cancellation. Our administration of alien property is a shameless story of waste, extravagance, graft, embezzlement and theft."

According to one of the most important Administration advisers, reduction or cancellation will never come unless public sentiment favors it, and, in his opinion, public sentiment will not so form unless it is apparent that the non-payment of the debts may injure American trade.

HAUGEN TO SPONSOR FARM BILL IN HOUSE

Accepts Measure Without the 'Tariff Yardstick' Favored by St. Louis Conference.

CONCESSION TO THE SOUTH

Third Term for Coolidge Involved in New Effort to Push Legislation.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 19.—After a series of conferences with farm organization leaders, Representative Gilbert N. Haugen of Iowa, one of the authors of the now discarded McNary-Haugen Farm Aid bill, will introduce in the House tomorrow the measure drafted at the recent Western-Southern Farm Conference at St. Louis. With a few minor changes, it is the same measure that was introduced in the Senate last week by Senator McNary.

After considerable reluctance Representative Haugen agreed to present this measure. It was reported today that at a conference with the farm organization leaders last night they served a virtual ultimatum on him that unless he sponsored their bill it would be offered by Representative Purnell of Indiana, thus minimizing Mr. Haugen's leadership in the contest for Government assistance to agriculture.

The understood objection of Representative Haugen to the bill approved by the St. Louis conference was that it did not provide for using the tariff yardstick in measuring prices of farm products when put upon the market under the system of control advocated by some of the farm organizations.

South Objected to Tariff Yardstick.

Western farm organization men objected to the tariff yardstick method because they are anxious to preserve their combination with Southern farm organizations and the Southerners declined to participate in furthering any legislation that would recognize the protective tariff.

The tariff yardstick method called for fixing a price of a farm commodity based on the export price of the commodity plus the tariff that would be assessed against the commodity if it were imported. The new McNary-Haugen bill is represented by its authors as being free from the objection that applied to the discarded bill as a price fixing measure, although it retains the equalization fee provisions, the fee to be based, however, on the crop itself and not on the individual farmer when he sells his crop to the Government agency which will market it.

Representative Haugen's agreement to sponsor the bill, which is the outcome of the new coalition between cotton farmers of the South and the Western farm organizations, indicates that the opposition among advanced farm aid advocates in the House of Representative to undertaking any agricultural legislation at the present session of Congress has been dissipated.

Involves Coolidge's Candidacy.

The chief purpose of the proposal to abandon farm aid legislation for this session was political, the contention being made that if the matter were postponed until the next Congress the Coolidge Administration and its following in the Senate and the House would be disposed to make concessions with a Presidential campaign approaching, or, if the Administration forces continued to resist, that fact could be used to arouse farmers in the Republican West against any movement for the renomination of Mr. Coolidge.

The advanced farm aid advocates are lining up behind former Governor Frank O. Lowden of Illinois in the interest of putting him forward as a candidate for the Republican nomination for President in 1928. In his opening speech on the subject of farm aid legislation Representative Dickinson of Iowa, leader of the Republican farm bloc in the House, made the statement:

"In my judgment, age with good health is not nearly so serious a handicap in a candidate for President as trying to exceed the standard eight years' limit that has been so unanimously fixed by precedent in previous years on Presidential candidacies."

This was a double reference to the fact that Mr. Lowden would be 68 at the beginning of the next Presidential term and to the discussion of a third term for President Coolidge.

WATCHMAN DIES IN BLAZE.

Known Only as Tony, He Perishes in Destruction of Shack.

Trapped in a shanty on a building construction job at 219th Street and Bronx Boulevard last night, an elderly watchman, known only as Tony, was burned to death by a fire which apparently started as he slept. He was last seen sitting in his chair, smoking and dozing. It is believed that his pipe dropped as he slept and ignited newspapers on the floor.

Harry Davis, another watchman, sent in a fire alarm. When the firemen arrived the shack had burned to the ground. The body was removed to Fordham Morgue.

MEXICAN CONSUL REPLIES TO BISHOPS

He Says His Nation Is Willing to Have Attitude on Church Judged by Our Standards.

CONDEMNS MEXICAN CLERGY

Asks if Catholics Here Condone War on Public Schools—Charges Church Thwarts Freedom.

The Mexican Government, judged even by the American standards, which the Catholic Bishops of the United States requested in a pastoral letter, issued by Cardinal Hayes last Wednesday, cannot be indicted for its attitude toward the Church because no comparison can be made between the attitude of the Catholic Church in America and the actions of the Church in Mexico, said Arturo M. Elias, Consul-General of Mexico, in a statement issued yesterday in reply to the letter. If the Church had confined itself to its spiritual field in Mexican affairs and had not mixed in its political and social affairs there would be no complaint against it, he says.

Not only is Mexico willing to have its attitude toward the Church judged by American standards, he says, but it is willing also to be judged by the standards of the Catholic Church in America. He goes on to say that the fundamental principle in America, applied to religion is freedom, but that the Mexicans have never been able to establish such religious freedom.

Tried for Independence.

The Mexicans attempted to establish their independence between 1810 and 1820, he says.

"The Holy Inquisition still existed," he declares, "and so dominant was the Catholic hierarchy that it was able to write into our Constitution not merely that the Catholic religion would be the State religion but that none other would be tolerated. Of course, freedom of press was not permitted, nor freedom of assembly, nor freedom of thought.

"In 1815 the Holy Inquisition had 'relaxed to the secular arm' for execution of the great patriot and statesman, José Maria Morelos, himself a priest, for the 'heresy' of supporting independence. Then began, and is still in process after over a hundred years of blood and anguish, the struggle to attain what the American people achieved at the time of their independence, but which was denied the Mexicans.

"The Mexican people thought they had achieved it in the middle of the last century when our great leader Benito Juarez and a group of liberty-loving individuals—all of them pious and devout Catholics, incidentally—having long realized that religion was one thing and political and economic control another, managed legally to separate Church and State. But they reckoned without their foe. The hierarchy precipitated a bloody three-year civil war for the retention of their special privileges, and, when finally defeated, brought about a foreign intervention which imposed as Emperor the Hapsburg Archduke Maximilian. Even after this empire fell, the clergy were not beaten, however, and although the reform laws remained on the statute books, they were nullified in practice and in fact.

Refers to Pastorals.

"Religious liberty and tolerance indeed!

"I refer the eminent Cardinal and Bishops of the United States to any and every pastoral issued by their colleagues, the Archbishops and Bishops of Mexico, at that time, so that they may note and ponder the invariable references to religious freedom and tolerance as 'impious,' 'sacrilegious,' 'un-Catholic' and 'infamous.' They have not changed.

"Let the Cardinal and Catholic Bishops of the United States ask any of the Protestant missionaries who are now in Mexico to relate the early experiences of many who were beaten, set upon, and how some lost their lives—martyrs to their religious faith; and of others who narrowly escaped death for the crime of being 'Protestantes.'

"Liberty, tolerance, indeed! When the word 'Protestants' is today used by the Mexican Catholic hierarchy, and unfortunately by many Mexicans who have been under their sway, as an epithet of contempt! Where else in the world do Catholics now celebrate Holy Saturday by burning Judas in effigy and where else does the word 'Judio' (Jew) rival 'Protestante' as a label of infamy? Who was it that taught the Mexican people that?

"Freedom! The Mexicans want freedom with the passion of a people to whom it has been denied. They want education; they want to go to those schools, those civil schools against which the Catholic hierarchy in Mexico have always conducted and are now conducting an instransigeant warfare, denouncing them as 'Godless' and 'atheistic,' merely because they are public schools. Do the Catholic clergy in the United States condone that?

Cites Church Growth Here.

"This is but a small part of the story. The task of setting down the full truth about the Catholic hierarchy as it is in Mexico is revolting. What better evidence do the Catholic hierarchy in the United States need but to compare what they have done, coming as an insignificant minority to a Protestant country and building a Church which is strong, growing, active in its support of the Government, which prides itself in being patriotic and loyal, and the position of the Catholic Church in Mexico which had an unchallenged monopoly for three and a half centuries and which has left a desert of ignorance, misery and superstition which is apparent to even the most casual visitor?

"It is true that there exist now in Mexico restrictions to limit the political activities of the clergy which do not exist in the United States. It is true that there is an attempt now being made in Mexico by legal means to limit the further perpetuation of superstition and ignorance among the Mexican masses. Our history tells fully, convincingly pathetically, why these laws have been found necessary."

ARMY FLIGHT FACES FOG DELAY AT START

Pan-American Hop-Off Will Not Take Place Today Unless San Antonio Mist Abates.

CLOUDS AND RAIN FORECAST

Curious Crowds Inspect Five Craft, All Ready for Take-Off—Pilots' Wives Will Christen Them.

SAN ANTONIO, Texas, Dec. 19 (AP).—Foggy weather conditions may force postponement of the start of the Pan-American flight of five army planes, scheduled for tomorrow.

A heavy fog settled today over Duncan Field, scene of the hop-off, and Captain Ira Eaker, publicity officer of the flight, said this would delay the start if it continued tomorrow. If the fog lifted only a little, the planes could get away, Captain Eaker said, but he was certain the start would not be attempted in mist as heavy as that prevailing today.

While the fog and dripping air could not quiet the roaring motors of the Liberty engines in the five amphibian planes, which will carry the pilots on their 20,000-mile good-will tour, the combination of adverse weather conditions prevented trial flights today. But Major Herbert A. Dargue, commander of the flight, said everything was in readiness for the start.

If Duncan Field is too wet for the take-off, the planes, each weighing 6,000 pounds loaded, will be taxied to a concrete runway at Kelly Field, a mile away.

Despite the weather today crowds swarmed over Duncan Field and swirled about the big planes, which, with their yellow wings and black bodies, look like huge pelicans. This resemblance to the water fowl is due to the long, beak-like boat bodies and the inverted motors.

Will "Play Safe," Dargue Says.

Major Dargue said that he and his fellow-pilots were going "to play safe throughout the flight."

"These are great ships," he said. "They will do the work, but we are not going to take any chances at any point.

"It is most fitting that the start should be made at this time, because we can carry Christmas greetings and good-will on wings of the air to countries of the South.

"My fellow-pilots and myself feel that this is the greatest honor that could come to us, the chance to lead our fellow-men on a mission of peace."

At a dinner given in honor of the pilots last night, Major General Mason Patrick, chief of the Army Air Service, said that San Antonio was the best place in the country to train fliers, and that the army was concentrating its most important air activities here.

The pilots of the Pan-American flight would be "winged ambassadors of peace," General Patrick said.

"The first Christmas message of peace on earth, good-will to men' came on wings of angels, and it is fitting, therefore, that this mission of peace should go forth at this Christmas season on the wings of the air service," said the chief.

"Airplanes are bringing nations closer to each other, and with this shrinkage of distance comes greater understanding.

"The greatest achievements of the air today are for commercial purposes. This flight will encourage South American countries to develop aviation, and it will result in charting many new airways."

The planes, named for five American cities, will be christened tomorrow morning by wives of five of the pilots. If the weather is suitable, the planes will take off as soon after the ceremonies as they can get away.

Summary of Fliers' Route.

The pan-American flight has been divided into six parts, the completion of the last of which will bring the airmen back to Washington after having flown around practically all of South America. The distance has been estimated at 18,534 miles.

Setting out on the first leg of the flight, the airmen will go from San Antonio to Brownsville, Texas, and then to Tampico, Vera Cruz and Salina Cruz, Mexico. From Salina Cruz the airmen will fly down the west coast, visiting Guatemala City, San Salvator, Amapala, Honduras; Managua and San José, Costa Rica, ending the first division at Panama.

The next division will carry the fliers on down the west coast of South America to the last station, Valdivia, Chile.

From Valdivia they will cut across the continent to Nouquen and Bahia Blanca, Argentina, and then wing their way up the east coast to Rio de Janeiro, the last station in the third division.

To Visit Several Brazilian Cities.

On leaving the Brazilian capital on the start of the fourth division, the airmen will fly first to Victoria and then on to other Brazilian cities, the Guianas, Port of Cpain, Trinidad; Caracas, Venezuela, and back to Port of Spain, where the fourth division ends.

The fifth division will carry the airmen first to St. George on the Island of Grenada, and finally to St. Thomas, in the Virgin Islands.

The first stop on the sixth stage of the air trip will be San Juan, Porto Rico. Then the fliers will go to Santo Domingo, Port au Prince, Hayti; Santiago de Cuba and other Cuban cities, including Havana. From Havana the aviators will head for the United States, making their first landing at Miami, Fla. They will then go on to Jacksonville, Savannah, Wilmington, N. C.; Langley Field and from there to Washington.

To Test Emergency Ration.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 19 (AP).—One of the numerous tests to be carried out in the Pan-American flight will be an experiment with a new emergency ration.

Mrs. W. O. Owen of this city has been experimenting with a palatable dehydrated "long journey" food, and Major Herbert Dargue has informed the War Department that the fliers will carry a small quantity of it to "see how she goes."

PROTEST ON STREET STANDS

Citizens Union Wants Charter Restrictions Unchanged.

The Citizens Union made public yesterday a letter to the Board of Aldermen, opposing a proposed local law introduced in the lower branch of the Municipal Assembly, which very largely would remove the restrictions placed by the city charter in 1916 upon the issuance of permits for sidewalk stands for the sale of soda water, cigars, cigarettes, tobacco and candy. The letter read:

"The wisdom of prohibiting encroachments upon sidewalks and streets, outside the building line, was recognized when the conservative restrictions, now sought to be eliminated, were inserted in the charter. The attempt to break them down is decidedly a backward step. With the growth of the city, these restrictions should be more stringent. In many sections it has been necessary to abolish the so-called 'stoop line' privileges entirely. In much of the area which this proposal would open to more stands and booths, the sidewalks are already overcrowded and inadequate for the normal movement of pedestrians. To allow an extension of the stand privilege would simply make matters worse. There can be no color of explanation for the proposal in question other than a desire to create more special privileges for bestowal upon favored persons."

HONOR MISS ROTHENBERG.

200 Attend Dinner Given by Society of Children's Shelter.

A testimonial dinner was given for Assistant District Attorney Rose Rothenberg (Mrs. Maximilian W. Goldstein) at the Hotel Astor last night by the Independent Ladies' Aid Society of the Hebrew Children's Home for Temporary Shelter. About 200 persons were present and heard the services of Miss Rothenberg to the society praised by Nathan Burkan, Henry M. Goldfogle, Justice Gustave Hartman, Justice Leopold Prince, Justice Samuel D. Levy and other speakers.

Miss Rothenberg was instrumental in obtaining a State charter for the society, enabling it to continue its work and widen the scope of its activities, and has since then taken an active part in the work of the organization. The home cares for children whose families have been temporarily disrupted by illness or other misfortune.

Mrs. Rachel A. Bernstein, who has been President of the Ladies' Aid Society since its foundation, announced that a plot at the corner of Grand Concourse and 205th Street had been purchased as the site for a new building for the Shelter. A campaign to raise money for the undertaking is to start at once.

WANAMAKER BELL HERE.

The Cunard liner Ascania, from Cherbourg and Southampton, arrived in New York yesterday, bringing, in addition to a new purser, a seventeen-ton bell which will ring out from the tower of the John Wanamaker store in Philadelphia as a memorial to John Wanamaker. The Ascania brought 562 passengers, including Dowager Lady Lilla Elliott coming to spend the holidays with relatives in the United States.

The Wanamaker memorial bell will be loaded today for shipment to Philadelphia. In the tower it will be 325 feet above street level, and will ring for the first time on New Year's Eve. It can be heard for thirty miles, it is said. It is to be called the "Founder's Bell," and is described as the ninth largest in the world and the seventh largest ringing bell. The largest bell in the Kremlin, Moscow, weighs 190 tons but is silent. The Wanamaker bell was cast in England, is nine feet six inches in diameter on the rim and seven feet nine inches high. The bell on a flat car will clear by a narrow margin of two inches some of the railroad tunnels through which it will pass en route to Philadelphia.

The Ascania's new purser is Arthur P. Williams, recently staff purser on the Cunarder Mauritania.

REPUBLICAN DEFEATS RED.

Is Elected to French Chamber From the Nievre Department.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Dec. 19.—Premier Poincaré's domestic and M. Briand's foreign policies were once more approved by French voters today when a partial election to the Chamber of Deputies in Nièvre Department was won by an Independent Republican, despite the backing all the Left parties gave a Communist candidate.

Dr. Leboeuf was chosen by 32,264 votes, against 27,480 given to the Communist. The significance of the figures is shown by the fact that his predecessor won only by 25,943 votes in May, 1924, when Cartel candidates in the same district averaged 28,401. Therefore about 6,000 votes have been displaced in favor of the Centre Right candidate.

Just a week ago three Right candidates were elected to fill three vacancies in the Nord Department. These results are likely to have an important bearing on the Senatorial elections three weeks hence.

VICTIM'S HOARD FOUND.

SALEM, N. J., Dec. 19.—A hoard of $363 in silver dollars was found buried in the ruins of the workshop in Alloway in which George Remsen, 67 years old, was burned to death last night. A larger sum in paper money is believed to have been destroyed.

Remsen was smoking a cigar and fell asleep, according to the Alloway authorities, setting fire to his clothing. A sister attempted to rescue him but was driven back by the flames. Remsen, unmarried, had worked in a lard factory for nearly fifty years. He had no faith in banks and kept all his savings near him.

CONFESSES SLAYING CHICAGO BOY OF SIX

Fugitive Who Led Priests to the Dying Victim and Fled Gives Up to Police.

SAYS CHILD ANGERED HIM

Examination in Prosecutor's Office, With Same Alienists, Recalls Leopold-Loeb Case.

CHICAGO, Dec. 19 (AP).—Harold J. Croarkin, 26 years old and son of a wealthy flour dealer, surrendered to the police tonight and confessed he had killed Walter Schmith, 6 years old, in a barn Friday night. Croarkin, who first confessed to priests immediately after his crime, went to the police with his uncle, Francis E. Croarkin, a former member of the Board of Education. He had been at his uncle's home since the slaying and it was through the uncle that plans were made for his surrender.

Croarkin, the police said, admitted that he had lured the boy into the barn, but pleaded that he was intoxicated and did not know what he was doing at the time of the murder.

Croarkin confessed without any apparent emotion, interspersing his story of clubbing the child to death with comments on the weather. He denied vehemently, however, that he had lured the boy into the barn to mistreat him and added, "I can't explain why I killed him."

Meanwhile the police are looking for Richard Pospishel, 14 years old, a schoolboy companion of the Schmitn boy, who disappeared last Wednesday. Croarkin, the police said, told them he knew nothing whatever of this boy.

"Harold has the mind of a 10-year-old," his uncle said. "He went to high school, but never was able to keep up and always was several grades behind his twin sister. His family never was able to understand him. He was always queer, and never had been able to earn his own living. In the last six months he has grown much worse in his odd behavior."

Robert E. Crowe, State's Attorney, who took personal charge of the examination as soon as Croarkin was taken to his office, summoned Dr. William O. Krohn and Dr. H. Douglas Signer, well-known alienist, to listen to the boy's statements and to forestall a plea of mental irresponsibility. Both alienists testified for the State in the trial of Nathan Leopold Jr. and Richard Loeb, slayers of young Bobby Franks.

At the State's Attorney's office Croarkin said he carried the unconscious boy from floor to floor of the stable, trying to decide what to do with him, before leaving him. He added that he sent his victim to a store to get milk, giving him 25 cents and telling him to keep the change. When the boy returned Croarkin flew into a rage.

"I don't know, I guess he didn't go to the right store and I kind of lost my head," he said. "I remember getting mad, real mad, and then I started hollering at him. As a rule, I have a very mild disposition. I guess the gin I drank made me lose my mind."

Later Croarkin said he killed the lad "because he made too much noise."

As the examination proceeded the State's Attorney's office began to take on much of the appearance it bore when the murder of Bobby Franks was being investigated and Leopold and Loeb were being examined. In addition to the two alienists who took part in the Franks case, the same prosecutors were involved. There was indication that the same sort of defense might be offered after Croarkin's uncle had stated that the youth had the mind of a child of 10. But whereas Loeb and Leopold boastfully admitted that they killed just for a thrill, Croarkin, half a dozen years their senior, maintained steadfastly that he had no particular motive.

PICK COFFIN'S SUCCESSOR.

Madison Av. Presbyterians Name the Rev. G. A. Buttrick of Buffalo.

The Rev. George A. Buttrick, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, Buffalo, who is only 34 years old, is the unanimous choice of the Committee on Pastor for the pulpit of the Madison Avenue Presbyterian Church at Seventy-third Street. This was announced at yesterday morning's service by the Rev. Dr. Henry Sloane Coffin, who has been the pastor for the last twenty-two years and is now President of Union Theological Seminary.

Dr. Coffin announced that a congregational meeting would be held next Wednesday evening at which the membership would be asked to extend a call to Mr. Buttrick. At the same meeting, Dr. Coffin will present his resignation as pastor.

It is expected that Mr. Buttrick will accept the call and that he will begin his ministry in this city about March 1. Timothy N. Pfeiffer, noted criminal lawyer, is Chairman of the committee, which has ten members.

Mr. Buttrick has not preached in the Madison Avenue Church, but the members of the committee have gone to Buffalo in pairs on different Sundays to hear him.

"I am delighted at the choice of the committee," said Dr. Coffin from his pulpit after making the announcement. "Mr. Buttrick is a man of modern scholarship, with a charming personality, modest and unassuming, thoroughly in sympathy with the ideals of this congregation."

IDENTIFY "TORPEDO" THUG.

Chicago's "torpedo bandit," who held up The Fair Store there Saturday, stole $11,000 of jewelry and spread panic through the shop by hurling torpedoes to the floor as he ran out, was said yesterday by police of Newark to be Hugh Craig, a "gentleman burglar," wanted in Essex County for robbery and a jail break.

The "torpedo bandit," who was captured by a policeman in Chicago, said he was Douglas Craig. The Newark police said Craig maintained a well-furnished apartment in the Oranges and perpetrated several robberies in other apartments before he was arrested and convicted on Nov. 20, 1922 to serve from fifteen to thirty years in State prison. As he was being led, handcuffed to six other prisoners, to a van awaiting to take all of them to the prison, Craig slipped his handcuff and escaped.

Seven of Santiago Board Return.

Seven members of the Santiago Memorial Commission of the State of New York returned from Cuba yesterday on the Calamares of the United Fruit Company, after participating in the dedication of the memorial to the American soldiers who fell at San Juan Hill. They were State Senator Duncan T. O'Brien of this city, Chairman; James S. Long, Deputy Surveyor of Customs, Secretary; Wilson Cheeny of Eden, N. Y., Treasurer; Major Alexander Granjosh of Yonkers and three members of the Seventy-first Regiment Veterans' Association. Brig. Gen. Franklin W. Ward, who attended the ceremonies as Governor Smith's representative, also returned.

PRIEST DIES OF SHOCK; CALLED IN AUTO DEATH

Chicopee Curate Is Stricken Soon After Giving Last Rites to Girl and Boy Hit by Car.

CHICOPEE, Mass., Dec. 19 (AP).—Called to administer the last rites of the Catholic Church to two persons struck by an automobile, one of whom was fatally injured, the Rev. Albert J. Robillard, assistant pastor of St. George's Church, returned to the parish house tonight so overcome with grief and shock that he died within twenty-five minutes. Father Robillard had been suffering from high blood pressure.

Miss Mary Malone, aged 28, died a few minutes after receiving the last sacraments, having suffered a fractured skull when run down by an automobile while crossing the street with a nephew, Cyril Malone, aged 8. The boy is suffering from shock and a fractured jaw and is in a critical condition. The driver of the machine, Frank Canton, of this city, was arrested.

Father Robillard, who was 47 years old, was born in Southbridge. He attended Assumption College and Nicolet College in Canada and was ordained in Baltimore in 1915. He had served as a curate in Indian Orchard, Willimansett and North Adams. He came to St. George's Church last February.

DURANT ANALYZES WOMAN.

Calls Her Conservative—Will Soon Help and Not Outdo Man, He Says.

What woman is, how she spends her time and the effect she has on man, were dealt with last evening by Will Durant, the autor of the Story of Philosophy, speaking at the forum of the West Side Unitarian Church.

The subject of the talk was "The Psychological Differences of Men and Women," and after quotations from Aristotle, Schopenhauer, Darwin and Durant the impression was relayed to the audience that in the highly specialized cosmos which is life, woman was what made the wheels go around. While man is merely an intellectualist, woman is intelligent. She is religious and inclined to conservatism; while man turns out an occasional idiot or genius and is, in the home, merely the commissary department.

While woman is being gregarious and religious at home, Mr. Durant said, she is storing up energy. Man, coming back from a day's hard efforts finds woman rested while he is tired. Naturally she rules the house. Moreover woman makes man forget himself. At 21, he said, most men have ideas of reforming the world, but after a year's marriage all that is forgotten.

Mr. Durant said he thought woman would presently give over the attempt to triumph over man in his own fields and would settle down where she should be, and will assist man rather than try to outdo him in what might be classed as his life.

OLVANY'S NIECE IN COURT.

While Magistrate Jean Norris handled a number of routine cases in Jefferson Market Court yesterday morning, the operation of the court machinery was watched with keen interest by Miss Marie Olvany of 5 Fife Street, Forest Hills, Queens, a niece of George Olvany, leader of Tammany Hall. Miss Olvany is planning to begin the study of law next Fall. She sat in front of the rail separating the main court room from the enclosure in front of the Magistrate's bench.

Miss Olvany appeared especially interested in the case of John Dolan of 454 West Thirty-seventh Street, charged with having mistreated his wife and children on Saturday night. The Magistrate had him promise to devote the next six months to a gentler domestic policy and placed him on probation for a year. This application of the Christmas spirit to court procedure seemed to impress Judge Olvany's niece.

ASKS AID FOR SYRIA.

Mrs. H. S. Owen Says Country Has "Fallen Among Thieves."

An appeal to stimulate American interest in the situation in Syria was made by speakers at the Community Church, Park Avenue and Thirty-fourth Street, last night. The program was arranged by students of the International House, 500 Riverside Drive.

Mrs. Herbert S. Owen said that Syria had "fallen among thieves," and that it was the duty of this country to play the part of the good Samaritan. She said the reason for our lack of interest was that the people of the United States were totally ignorant of conditions there. Other speakers were Matta Akrawi, I. Kahil, A. Sebig and William B. Seabrook.

COLD WAVE BREAKS; RAIN IS DUE TODAY

TWO OTHERS IN NEW JERSEY

Policeman Saves Seven, Overcome by Fumes—Trains From West Running Behind Schedule.

The cold wave which swept down from the Hudson Bay region and continued to make New York shiver yesterday had started to abate last night. Rain and warmer is the forecast for today. Numerous fires and cases of persons overcome by coal gas from improperly fired furnaces and stoves were reported yesterday. The lowest temperature for the day was 9 at 3:20 A. M., and the highest, 25 at 3:30 P. M.

John Robinson, 60 years old, no address, died soon after he collapsed in a mission at 8 Bowery at 2 A. M. He had 60 cents in his pockets. An unidentified man, about 40 years old, died in Bellevue Hospital from exposure and alcoholism, soon after he was picked up in front of 38 Bowery and taken to the hospital. He was 5 feet 10 inches tall, weighed 180 pounds, had dark hair and was clean shaven. He wore a brown suit, brown cap, tan shoes and gray socks.

Simon Stun, 68, a bargeman on a scow, was taken to Bellevue Hospital suffering from submersion and alcoholism after he had fallen into the North River at the foot of West Fifty-eighth Street in attempting to walk from a stringpiece to the scow.

Seven Persons Resuscitated.

Seven persons overcome by coal gas were rescued as a result of the promptness of Patrolman Thomas McGrath of the Fifth Street Station. An excited man ran into the station at 2 o'clock in the morning and told McGrath that a whole family had been overcome at 219 Seventh Street. McGrath hurried to that address, entered the basement and found Ethel Raifel, 25; her sisters, Rose, 16, and Frieda, 11, and her brother, Samuel, 12, unconscious. He flung open windows, then called an ambulance from Bellevue and the rescue squad of the Consolidated Gas Company. Dr. Hendes and Pulmotor Operators Duane, O'Hagen and McFalden answered the emergency call and found that efforts to resuscitate the four Raifels were already under way. When the sisters and their brothers were revived they were permitted to stay at home.

McGrath had hardly returned to the station before he was assigned to the rescue of three persons reported overcome by coal gas at 343 East Eighth Street. In the basement on the floor he found Mrs. Mary Friedman, 40, and her son, David, 16, and daughter, Catherine, 12. Patrolman McGrath again called an ambulance and a rescue squad and the lives of the mother and children were saved.

Rescuer Is Overcome.

William Winston, 65, 459 Pearl Street, discovered a fire in the basement of a paint store in a five-story tenement house at 9 James Street when he was passing. He turned in an alarm, and when firemen arrived they found Winston nearly overcome by smoke in the hallway of the house where he was trying to give the alarm to tenants. Firemen put out the fire in the cellar and Winston was revived by an ambulance surgeon.

The Pennsylvania Railroad reported that some of its through trains from the West were running more than an hour behind schedule due to the cold weather, and the New York Central reported delays of fifteen minutes on some of its Western trains. The cold weather had not affected the roads' operations in local territory.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Dec. 19.—Joseph Bowers, 66 years old, a farmer, was found frozen to death at his farm near Buena Vista this morning by a party of neighbors. Bowers's body was on the floor beside the remains of a fire which had gone dead in the night. Bowers is said to be survived by one son, a minister in Wilkes-Barre, Pa.

MANTUA, N. J., Dec. 19.—Frozen to death when stricken along the roadside within a few hundred feet of her home near here, the body of Mary Pratt, 65 years old, colored, was found this morning by her granddaughter, Bessie Smith. The woman had gone out of the house in scant clothing and physicians said she died from exposure.

TO ASK FUNDS NOW FOR NEW CRUISERS

that could be built. It merely limited them in size to not more than 10,000 tons and provided that they should be armed with guns not larger than 8-inch calibre, without, however, limiting the number of such weapons that might be mounted.

Ratio in Light Cruisers Inversed.

The so-called 5-5-3 ratio was imposed by treaty merely on capital ship construction, but it was then the idea of American officials that the same ratio should be applied to cruisers and other types. Official data collected by the Office of Naval Intelligence has been supplied to Chairman Butler, showing that, instead of being on the 5 end of a 5-5-3 ratio in light cruisers the United States now ranks third and might even drop into fourth place.

This data showed that the relative strength of the United States, Great Britain, Japan, France and Italy, the powers signatory to the naval limitation treaty, in first-line light cruisers already built—cruisers that actually exist—is as follows:

Country.	Number.	Tonnage.
United States	10	75,000
Great Britain	40	194,290
Japan	19	102,005
France	3	16,731
Italy	8	30,784

In first line light cruisers now being built the relative standing is:

Country.	Number.	Tonnage.
United States	2	20,000
Great Britain	11	110,000
Japan	6	54,200
France	6	53,010
Italy	2	20,000

It will be noted that these are all of the latest type and except those of Italy and Japan are of 10,000 tons each, the limit fixed for light cruisers by the naval limitation treaty. Those of Japan are a fraction over 9,000 tons each and of France a fraction under that size.

The relative standing in first-line light cruisers "authorized and appropriated for" is as follows:

Country.	Number.	Tonnage.
United States	3	30,000
Great Britain	3	28,000
Japan	0	.....
France	1	10,000
Italy	0	.....

British Lead Secure in Any Case.

Should Congress not only appropriate for the three cruisers of the 1924 program, but also grant the ten contemplated in the new Butler bill, introduced yesterday with the support of the President, the cruiser strength of the United States would then jump—upon their completion—to twenty-eight light cruisers, having an aggregate tonnage of 285,000 tons.

Even this program would not equal Great Britain's total of fifty-four cruisers of 332,290 tons in those "built," "building" or "authorized and appropriated for." Adding the nine other cruisers Great Britain has "authorized" but "not appropriated for" the total for that nation would then be sixty-three cruisers and about 90,000 tons greater.

Japan is building six cruisers, according to the same official data, of which two of 7,100 tons each are of the Kako class and the other four of 10,000 tons each are of the Myoko class. These belong to the program due for completion by 1931.

"In addition the Japanese Administration has fixed upon the following five-year 'replacement' building program," say the Naval Intelligence Office. "This involves the expenditure of 261,000,000 yen, which is a compromise from the original figure of 325,000,000 yen. This program has not as yet been formally authorized by the Diet, which is to meet Dec. 24.

"There is every reason to believe that authorization will be forthcoming shortly after the Diet meets. The proposed replacement building program of Japan is then given as four 10,000-ton cruisers, fifteen destroyers, four fleet or cruiser submarines, two gunboats, one mine layer and one airplane carrier or tender."

MEMORANDUM

From: The President

To : V. P. in Charge of Trusts

In looking over the record of the thousands of wills filed with the Trust Department during the past two or three years I have been impressed not only with the number but with the fact that so many are made by those with considerable estates and still engaged in active business.

This prompts me to urge that we shall wherever possible point out to those who have made us executors that we can much better serve them when the time comes to administer their estates if in the meanwhile we know something of their activities.

I am sure that everyone will appreciate the fact if they have been doing business with us and really come to know us and we have acquired a knowledge of their affairs, that it will be of great mutual advantage later on.

WAVE OF DEVOTION SWEEPS ALL JAPAN

Theatres, Stores and Streets Are Deserted While People Pray for Dying Ruler.

THRONGS BESIEGE SHRINES

Other Crowds Wade Into Icy Sea for Rites, and Ceaseless Vigil Is Kept at Hayama.

TOKIO, Monday, Dec. 20 (AP).—The critical illness of the Japanese Emperor, who lies near death at the Imperial villa at Hayama, has cast a pall of gloom and business depression over Japan.

Numerous festivals and beflagged streets, the usual holiday dress of the nation at this season, have been forgotten because of the gravest apprehensions regarding the Emperor's condition. Scheduled celebrations and festivals have been indefinitely postponed. Theatres generally are dark or playing to vacant seats, while the aisles of the department stores are empty, the usual holiday shopping having been postponed.

A succession of extra editions of the newspapers, containing bulletins from the sick room, find anxious buyers, and the strident calls of newsboys break the somewhat ominous silence in the streets, which are virtually deserted.

It was stated officially at 8:20 A. M. today that the Emperor passed a quiet night. His temperature was about 96, his pulse 112 and respiration 22.

Pray to Ancestors for Yoshihito.

Throughout Japan yesterday crowds gathered at the shrines and temples, where prayers were offered for the recovery of the Emperor. Prince Sanjo and Viscount Makino, personally representing the imperial family, visited the Grand Shrine, Ise, where they called on the ancestral spirits of the long line of Japanese Emperors to restore Yoshihito to health.

Government business is almost at a standstill, owing to absence of Ministers, Councilors and other officials, who are all at Hayama, where the declining ruler is making a fight for life. Princess Teru, a grandchild of the Emperor, visited her grandfather Saturday and then returned to Tokio.

The villa in which the Emperor has ill is set on a pine-clad point, facing the ocean, where several warships are anchored. Braving the icy waters on the beach, many priests and worshipers are constantly wading toward the sea, performing a water purification service.

In the villa, which is a temporary structure replacing one destroyed by the earthquake of 1923, numerous ladies-in-waiting attend the Empress, who is watching the sick ruler day and night. The Empress has been untiring in her devotion, and her fidelity has won the praise of all her subjects.

Empress Sends Food to Reporters.

About 350 reporters and correspondents are assembled outside the villa walls, rushing in motorcycles and automobiles to Tokio with frequent bulletins.

Friday night, the coldest of the present year, was a trying one for the band of reporters. The Empress, upon learning of their untiring vigil, personally ordered refreshments carried to them. This was considered an extraordinary honor by the Japanese reporters, who did not eat the sandwiches and cakes, but wrapped them to be saved as treasures.

Only doctors and members of the family are permitted in the sick room, which is furnished along simple lines, with a dim electric light and an electric stove.

Because the entire Cabinet is at Hayama, informal meetings of the Ministry are frequently held in a little teahouse, which is carefully guarded by the police. The problem of obtaining accommodations for the Government Ministers and high Government officials has become a difficult one, because Hayama is a small village.

Ambrose Swasey Has 80th Birthday.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 19 (AP).—Ambrose Swasey, of Warner & Swasey, manufacturers of machine tools and astronomical instruments since 1880, celebrated today his eightieth birthday anniversary. The firm constructed the 36-inch Lick telescope, the 40-inch Yerkes, one of 60-inch diameter for the Argentine National Observatory, a 72-inch reflecting telescope for the Canadian Government, and a 26-inch instrument for the Washington Naval Observatory. Mr. Swasey invented the range and position finder used by the United States Government.

PEKING, Dec. 19.—The contents of the note which the British Chargé d'Affaires has submitted to the Diplomatic Corps for its consideration remain secret. The British Legation declines to give any information on the ground that the note is confidential.

It is understood, however, that the note outlines what Great Britain feels should be the policy of the powers toward China and was put forward with the object of ascertaining whether the other powers signatory to the Washington Treaty would support it or suggest a better one.

This program, according to some, is said to be liberal, among other things suggesting granting the Washington surtaxes and their collection by the Maritime Customs.

The various legations have submitted it to their Governments and pending receipt of the replies no statement is likely to be made here.

PEKING, Dec. 19 (AP).—Reports from Honan Province disclose continued advances eastward by the Kuominchun (national armies). They are now allied with Canton and are fighting their way back through the northern territory they lost when thrust out of Peking a year ago by Marshals Wu Pei-fu and Chang Tso-lin.

The Honan reports confirm the capture of Shengchow by the Kuominchun. It is the western terminus of the Lunghai Railway.

Marshal Chang and his Manchurians are massed just north of the Yellow River. Marshal Wu, his position steadily becoming more precarious, is said to be sending soldiers to Honan-fu to reinforce the retreating Shensiese, who fell back upon Mienchi in Honan Province.

HANKOW, Dec. 19.—Representatives of 150 Chinese organizations convened last night in Hanyang, on the Han River opposite Hankow, for the purpose of forming a corps for propaganda against the British and Marshal Chang Tso-lin of North China and Manchuria.

Placards are being posted throughout the district calling for "the overthrow of the British."

The Nationalists, in a statement as to their financial policy, announce that they are making an issue of banknotes to the amount of 35,000,000 silver dollars (about $15,000,000 in United States currency) and retiring all existing paper money, beginning Jan. 1.

Notwithstanding the promises of the Cantonese authorities, large numbers of armed troops have entered the British concession here, leading ponies along the pavements. British naval forces landed and cleared the concession of them.

The Chinese troops were members of the Canton Seventh Army Corps from Kiangsi Province. On the landing of the naval detachments they left the British concession and proceeded to the New World Building in the native city and drove out the Labor Council by force. They occupied the building and are said to have bayoneted three men.

This evening's military orders affect all Southern and Kiangsi troops, who are to move toward Hangchow, where fighting is expected.

CALLS ON CABINET TO CUT FRENCH ARMY

Chamber Demands That New Recruiting System Be Put Into Effect.

CHANGE WILL BE GRADUAL

Troops With the Colors Will Number 500,000 Instead of 600,000, as at Present.

By EDWIN L. JAMES.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Dec. 19.—Before Parliament adjourned early this morning the Chamber voted a resolution calling on the Government to begin to put into effect the changes in army recruiting which would lead to placing the military system of France on a one-year basis by May, 1929.

This would be done by starting in 1927 calling men to the colors several months after the age of 20 years with the result that in May, 1929, they would all be called at the age of 21 instead of 20, and for one year instead of eighteen months.

The effect of reducing military service from eighteen months to twelve months would be to cut the army by 125,000 men, each year's class numbering about 250,000. The present plan would make a cut of about 80,000 in 1927, about 110,000 in 1928 and 125,000 in 1929, calculated on a rather complicated scale.

However, this does not mean a flat reduction of 125,000 men in the strength of the French army, for it is part of the Government's plan to increase the professional army from 160,000 to 200,000 men. It is also probable that there will not be a reduction in the number of officers corresponding with the cut of 125,000 men. Changes in organization will be effected by reducing the effectives of units while retaining largely their skeleton formation.

At the present time the French army is made up of 450,000 metropolitan troops, or troops stationed in France, plus 150,000 troops stationed outside of France. Putting into effect the proposed reform would mean leaving France an army of approximately 500,000 instead of 600,000 now with the colors.

In a speech attending passage of the resolution War Minister Painlevé made plain that, while the motion would be carried out by the Government, the Cabinet retained the right to use discretion as to the dates for the changes in order not to cripple the army unduly. He promised that the Government would begin on May 1 institution of the new régime. In an interview published today M. Painlevé said that while it might be regarded as unfortunate it was nevertheless true that France must keep a strong army for some years to come and that he would devote himself to obtaining more attractive conditions for officers, whose pay, he said, was too low now.

However, it remains plain that the new step is a move toward reduction of the French military strength, at least in numbers. Before the war France had military service of three years. Since the war this has been progressively reduced until now Parliamentary measures have been taken for a service of twelve months. While it is true that the Socialists are working for nine months' service, there appears little chance of this reduction being adopted in the near future.

PARIS, Dec. 19.—Madeleine was not a bad-hearted girl but she could not see living in a small town down in the south of France with her old father, a widower, so she came to Paris and was soon swept into the pitiless whirl of the city's gay night life.

Her father traced and then followed her here. He found her last night in a music hall where with a number of girls and men she was starting out another evening, like every other evening, filled with the thought that she was "living her own life."

The old father pleaded with her to return home. But Madeleine was young—young enough to imagine that her new life was one of pleasure. She refused to go home. So he shot himself and fell dead at her feet.

In his pocket was a letter to police which read:

"I cannot survive my daughter's dishonor."

PARIS, Dec. 19.—The Chateau d'If, which Alexander Dumas rendered famous by making it the scene of the imprisonment and escape of the Count of Monte Cristo, is menaced with ruin. The buttress of rock rising from the sea just outside of Marseilles is known to every visitor to the Mediterranean port. The islet stronghold, consisting of central donjon and mighty stone ramparts jutting sheer above the waves, used to belong to the navy Administration, but has become obsolete as a military defense point, abandoned, classed as a historic monument, and placed in control of the Fine Arts Ministry.

Although an annual sum of 40,000 francs is provided for in the arts budget, the Ministry appears to have neglected to undertake necessary repairs, and it is now reported that the walls from which Monte Cristo dived into the sea are crumbling slowly under the action of ocean storms.

exaggerated, and the whole of the troops, with the exception of a few officers who are under arrest, now support the new order.

Life throughout Lithuania has resumed an outwardly normal aspect. The State siege in Kovno has been removed, although the whole country temporarily remains under martial law.

Passenger trains from Kovno are arriving at Riga regularly. The Kovno wireless station last night broadcast the usual lively concert, but it was interrupted by an official announcement in French explaining the course of events which the old Government's persistent policy of "Polonization and Bolshevization" had forced the military to precipitate.

The announcement added the fact that the military had not met with resistance anywhere and had not shed a drop of blood, which proved, it was said, that they represented the people's wishes which the Government had "betrayed."

Warsaw Hears of Conflicts.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

WARSAW, Dec. 19.—Vilna newspapers as well as those of Warsaw are filled with reports of sanguinary encounters between conflicting factions in Lithuania. Szawle, the second largest city of Lithuania, is reported to be in the hands of the Communists, with Olita, Kalvaria and Mariepol still retained by the old Government.

There are also reports from Vilna that the General commanding the Nationalist forces plans to mass his troops on the Polish frontier. In Kovno the theatre orchestras are said to have adopted "Reine de le Peque" (the Queen of Spades), as the new national anthem.

The Polish public, despite reassuring advices by the Government, professes to be alarmed, still adhering to the belief that the revolt at Kovno foreshadows a new attempt to wrest the Polish Corridor and Silesia from that country.

Little concern is being shown, however, among those close to Marshal Pilsudski who believe an attack from the north would be forestalled by Polish military prowess unless Russia and Germany intend to aid the Lithuanians.

The fact that the Government last night issued an ultimatum that the Vilna district must not be violated is not taken as a challenge. The frontier was fixed by the Council of Ambassadors in 1923.

The only alarm in official circles is over the Fascisti of Lithuania, which might start an outbreak, but the danger of this is minimized in every quarter, except among groups unacquainted with the situation, and among the minorities, hoping there will be an open challenge of the Pilsudski régime. Army circles, chafing for action, are held responsible for some of the sensational reports.

Moscow Worried Over Turn of Events.

By WALTER DURANTY.

By Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

MOSCOW, Dec. 19— Moscow "views with alarm" the undoubted reaction of the Soviet Government to the Lithuanian coup d'état. Both the Isvestia and the Pravda describe it as a grave threat to the peace of Eastern Europe to be watched with close attention not only by Soviet but also by Western Statesmen.

Both newspapers see the hand of Poland in the "Fascist coup," as the Pravda terms it, but whereas the Pravda writer considers it new evidence of British machinations, the Isvestia hints that the "roots of the overthrow of the Lithuanian Government must be sought in Warsaw and perhaps other European capitals also," and refers to the mysterious negotiations of prominent Lithuanian Catholics with Marshal Pilsudski and representatives of the Vatican.

The reasons for Soviet anxiety are clear enough. The markedly Left Lithuanian Government, supported by labor federations and the poorer peasants, is suddenly replaced by groups of landlords, the richer peasants and Catholic clericals, the majority of whom, despite the fact that they are nationalist, are inclined in their sympathies toward Poland, or, as the Pravda puts it, they "subordinate their patriotism and their interest in national independence to their own classes."

That the coup occurs so soon after the ratification of the guarantee compact with the Soviet Union, which it was hoped here to complete with an important commercial treaty, which the Isvestia asserts is nearly ready for signature, leads to the conclusion that Lithuanian independence is dangerously menaced. In other words, Lithuania has passed from the Soviet to the Polish orbit.

Polish Intervention Feared.

The gravest immediate danger, it is thought here, lies in the possibility of armed Polish intervention in case the new régime is seriously endangered by a general strike or other resistance by the Lithuanian masses. The Soviet could not regard such action unmoved, and there is an uneasy feeling here that Marshal Pilsudski may have precisely this contingency in view.

Russians are wondering whether there was not after all some secret "deal" at Geneva with which the present German Cabinet crisis is connected. The suggestion that the German-Polish hatchet might be buried at the expense of Lithuania is not a new one, and so Moscow is oversuspicious that there is something ominous about the Reichswehr business and The Manchester Guardian "revelations"—which of course is denied here—as the pretext for the fall of the Marx Cabinet.

SEEKS HELP HERE FOR MUSIC CASTLE

Teacher Who Inherited It Wants a Committee to Convert It Into Operatic School.

PLANS OPENING AUG. 1

Pearl Flanagan, the singing teacher of Wichita, Kan., who became last summer the owner of the Chateau de Taurine, a thirteenth-century castle in Southern France, near the Pyrenees, announced yesterday that she was organizing an American committee with headquarters at the Hotel Plaza to convert the ancient edifice into a conservatory of music for American operatic students.

The castle has twenty-one rooms and no baths. Its walls are marked with the fire of the cannon of Richelieu and by battering rams said to have been employed against it by the Saracens in the thirteenth century.

After looking over the historic structure which had become hers in a surprising manner, the young soprano decided that it could easily be fitted up into a dormitory or main building for her proposed music centre. She now plans to build a small theatre on the property and to conduct musical and dramatic courses for American students under noted masters.

The proprietress of Taurine Castle, or the Countess de Taurine, as she has been informed that she now has a right to call herself, received the outright gift of the shot-marked castle from its owner, the Abbé Loubière, last Summer. No little Middle Western girl ever before became the chatelaine of a medieval demesne in so casual a manner.

Miss Flanagan Meets the Abbe.

Miss Flanagan purchased a souvenir at the Sacred Heart Church in Montmartre last August and called on the priest, the Abbé Loubière, to bless it. The abbé is a Frenchman who likes Americans. He questioned the young woman about her mission in life. She said that it was to organize a school for American music students in France, but that she could find no suitable place.

"I have just what you want," said the Abbé. He then told her that he had inherited the Chateau de Taurine and did not know what to do with it. "I have slept uneasily for four years on account of trying to think what to do with it," said the priest. He told her he had received a large money offer for the property from motion picture people and was on the verge of concluding the transaction, when it discovered that it was the purpose of the film company to burn down the old castle to make a movie spectacle.

The castle is said to have been the only fortress in that part of France to hold out against the Saracen invasion in the thirteenth century. It was held by the Calvinists against the Catholics in the religious wars of three centuries later. The priest was horrified at the idea of making the historic structure a bonfire for the silver sheet and withdrew from the deal. But he offered it free as an American musical centre. The young woman accepted it and is now its sole owner and as much a Countess as a great many users of the title. She not only owns the castle, but has paid taxes of $500 on it already.

Plans to Open It in August.

"I intend to open it as a musical school on Aug. 1," said Miss Flanagan yesterday. "I visited my feudal estate before returning from France and I am wildly enthusiastic about it. It is in a lovely location. It has wonderful climate Summer and Winter. It is near Lourdes, the centre of great tourist and pilgrim travel. I believe it will make a splendid location for the proposed school. I expect to appeal for financial help to put the chateau in order for receiving students next August, when I intend to open it for a summer season of ten weeks."

BUCHAREST, Dec. 19.—M. Meissner, the Minister of Public Works, speaking in Parliament yesterday in answer to the throne message, formally pledged the Government to a new economic and financial policy that will further collaboration with foreign capital.

"The existing principle of financial self-determination cannot longer satisfy the country's needs," M. Meissner said. "We need foreign capital while watching that our rights remain protected, but just the same giving all guarantees for making collaboration possible."

Ladies' Army and Navy Club Will Renovate Great London Mansion.

LONDON, Dec. 19 (AP).—Spencer House, a famous Georgian mansion, is to become the home of the Ladies' Army and Navy Club. The stately house in St. James's Place, S. W., was formerly the home of Earl Spencer.

Alterations are to be made to provide seventy bedrooms and twenty-five bathrooms. They intend to make it the finest club house in the world.

Princess Christopher of Greece, formerly Mrs. William B. Leeds of New York, occupied Spencer House for years and did a great deal toward modernizing it, adding an elevator, two wings and a steam-heating system.

DUTCH COUNCILOR TURNS SANDWICH MAN

Ex-Tramp's Banner Brings Throng to Sale for Unpaid Taxes at His Cafe.

ROTTERDAM, Dec. 19.—A Gilbertian incident occurred here when the furniture of M. Coremans, a former tramp but now a member of the Rotterdam Town Council, was sold at auction to discharge a tax debt.

Coremans, while still a tramp, was nominated for the Council by some electors as a protest again municipal politics generally, and he was elected by an overwhelming majority. At the Council meetings he championed many singular theories and frequently was ejected.

One of his enterprises was the founding of a small café in the centre of Rotterdam, which he called the "Temple of the Rabble." His refusal to pay taxes resulted in his prosecution in an attempt to collect the 85 florins due. The court ordered that his furniture should be sold.

The Councilor's reply was to parade the streets of Rotterdam for a fortnight as a sandwich man, bearing a placard announcing "In the name of the Queen," that the furniture in his café was to be sold and giving the date and hour of the sale.

A large crowd collected to see the fun at the sale. They found the "Temple of the Rabble" decorated with Christmas trees and flowers and a miniature coffin in the window containing a doll with the inscription: "Here Rests John Fraternity, Who Died From Taxation Debts."

An admirer of Coremans took up a collection among the crowd, bought in the furniture at ridiculously low prices and returned it to him.

The police charged the crowd, but in the end Coremans had resumed business and was serving extra drinks to the crowd.

LUTHER ASKS TIME ON CABINET OFFER

BERLIN, Dec. 19.—From Lisbon, where he yesterday received President von Hindenburg's message urging him to return as quickly as possible to Berlin, former Chancellor Luther wired the President that he could not undertake to participate in building a new Cabinet until he returned to Germany and had had an opportunity to familiarize himself with the political situation.

Dr. Luther is expected to arrive at Bremen on Tuesday and will proceed to Essen, his home town, for Christmas. When he will come to Berlin is not fixed, but until he confers with President von Hindenburg no definitive action for solution of the Ministerial crisis will be taken.

At Wilhelmstrasse yesterday so little was known of the ex-Chancellor's movements that he was reported to be still in Buenos Aires, whereas he actually had started his homeward voyage ten days before. Dr. Luther's friends here believe he will accept the Chancellorship only if a comprehensive agreement can be reached between the present governmental coalition and the Nationalists over social legislation affecting the unemployed and the eight-hour day, now before the Reichstag.

In other words, Dr. Luther will not consent to head the Government unless it is backed by the Parliamentary majority.

PUSHING A GERMAN BRAKE.

Bankers Are Seeking Its Adoption for French Railways.

PARIS, Dec. 19.—Financial interests, understood to be largely composed of German banks, are waging a campaign to obtain adoption of Kunze Knorr brakes for French freight trains. This type of brake already is used extensively in Germany, Sweden, Denmark, Hungary and Czechoslovakia.

French railroads now use Westinghouse brakes, but it is stated that only part of the rolling stock now is equipped. The Westinghouse Company is organized and operates in France, and naturally is fighting the proposed adoption of the German brake.

The final arbiter of the situation may be the International Railroad Union organized at the Berne Convention May 11, 1900, which required a standard equipment for all its member countries.

The plan suggested by supporters of the Knorr Company is to deliver the brakes according to the Dawes plan. The French railroads would pay for brakes delivered and the money would be placed to France's credit under the reparations schedules. Financiers would lend the railroads capital with which to buy the new equipment and a total of 2,500,000,000 francs is thought sufficient to equip all French freight cars. The work of installing brakes and manufacturing connecting pipes, &c., would be done exclusively by French companies, and this advantage has been explained to French manufacturers of tubes, bolts, plates, &c., to win their support.

It is also suggested that means may be arranged by which the Westinghouse company may profit largely by the adoption of the German brake.

An industrial battle of the first order is in prospect, however, and it is reported that the French Government is studying the problem under the dual aspect of its effect on the Dawes plan and on national industry.

A Moral Hazard Only

A WILL is such a common-sense matter that it puzzles us why so many keep putting it off. Do you balk at that little word "last" which carries an air of finality? A Will isn't the "last" you may make just because it says so. Change it as often as you wish.

Come in with your lawyer and talk over your Will and having this Company act as Executor and Trustee under it. We promise not to assume too grave an expression. We treat it as a serious business matter but we don't enjoy being solemn any more than you do.
